TIC TAC KILL

CRADLE KILLER

In 2007, the remote village of Musahar in Bihar witnessed one of India's most disturbing crime stories. Amarjeet Sada, just 8 years old, confessed to the murdering three infants—including his own sister. What made the case was so chilling wasn't just his age, but his eerie calmness and lack of remorse. He led villagers to the body of his last victim, a neighbor's six-month-old daughter, buried under a pile of leaves. Earlier, he had also killed his infant cousin and baby sister. Amarjeet reportedly smiled during his confession, even asking for biscuits after admitting to the crimes. Psychologists observed signs of severe conduct disorder, but at the time, the Indian justice system lacked tools to address crimes of this nature committed by someone so young. Due to his age, he could not be tried like an adult and was placed in a juvenile home until the age of 18. After his release in 2016, his identity and location were changed and remain unknown. The case raises uncomfortable questions are about childhood, the psychology, poverty, neglect, and how systems fail to spot warning signs before they erupt into horror. Amarjeet's story is a dark, unforgettable chapter in India's true crime history.It still lingers in collective memory, blurring the lines between innocence, evil, and the system's helplessness.

SECTOR 36

Is it real or fake

Sector 36" is a 2024 Bollywood thriller directed by Aditya Nimbalkar and produced by Dinesh Vijan's Maddock Films. The film delves into the dark underworld of crime and corruption in the city of Noida, specifically Sector 36, known for its notorious criminal activities. The story follows a heart shaking story ehich is insane and inhuman and can give trauma to the viewers till the deepest point.

The story

Netflix’s Sector 36 film is not for the weak hearts. The film makes you visit the horrific Nithari killings’ case. We have already written about the case and Surinder Koli who was accused of cannibalism. Here is all you need to know about the co-accused Moninder Singh Pandher.

Remember the Nithari’s ‘House of Horrors’. If the smell and taste of human blood gives you a high, this movie is a must watch. The plot of the Netflix original movie, Sector 36, is based on the Nithari Killings case in Noida, Uttar Pradesh, which shook the soul of the nation in 2006. The Hindu report stated, “Nithari Killings is nothing short of a betrayal of public trust.”

Inspired from true story and touching upon the present day situation, the scam behind organ trading, selling of unclaimed dead bodies and how it works, the film has shown every bit of it in detail.

The plot

When people complain about the Indian streaming industry relying too heavily on violence and gore, they're probably talking about stuff like Sector 36 — the new crime-thriller on Netflix that reduces a real-life horror story to a cat-and-mouse chase between two thinly written characters on either side of the law. The reluctant cop is played by Deepak Dobriyal, while Vikrant Massey gets top-billing the serial killer trying to evade his capture. They're put on collision course by a movie that routinely favours contrivance over cleverness, virtue-signalling over sensitivity.

In the film's centrepiece interrogation scene, modelled perhaps on the one featuring Robert De Niro and Al Pacino in Heat, Massey's character makes repeated references to necrophilia, child abuse, and cannibalism. But this isn't the problem.

Sector 36 is, after all, a movie about the infamous Nithari case from a couple of decades ago. But it becomes a problem precisely because the movie has no idea how to approach the story with nuance. It chooses, instead, to take the tone of a late night television newscast, drawing large circles around the most scandalous aspects of the terrible case while ignoring the very real human tragedy at its centre.

Inspired from true story and touching upon the present day situation, the scam behind organ trading, selling of unclaimed dead bodies and how it works, the film has shown every bit of it in detail.

The Survivor

Avnindra Pratap Pandey, a software engineer from Gorakhpur residing in Ber Sarai, New Delhi, was the male companion of the Jyoti Singh during the super tragic incident on December 16, 2012.

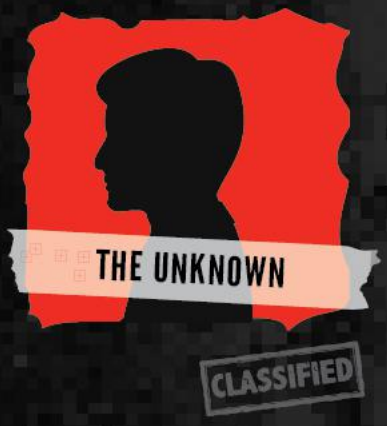

He sustained the severe injuries, including the broken limbs, but survived the brutal assault. Pandey testified in court on December 19, 2012, and recorded his statement with a sub-divisional magistrate at Safdarjung Hospital on December 21. He reportedly then experienced profound guilt and immense trauma over the incident.

The investigative team meticulously analyzed CCTV footage from the vicinity of the crime scene. This effort led them to identify the private bus used in the assault. The breakthrough came when they located the bus, which had been cleaned to remove evidence. The driver, Ram Singh, was among the first to be arrested, and his interrogation provided leads to the other assailants.

The swift action and dedication of the Delhi Police were instrumental in apprehending all six accused within days of the incident. This prompt response not only showcased the efficiency of the police force but also played a significant role in addressing public outrage. The case highlighted the importance of rapid investigative procedures and inter-departmental coordination in solving crimes of such heinous nature.

The juvenile

The 17-year-old juvenile in the Nirbhaya case received only three years in a reform home, despite being among the most brutal. His lenient sentence triggered national outrage and led to changes in India's juvenile justice laws, allowing minors involved in heinous crimes to be tried as adults.
