Master's Notes

The year 1964 will always be notable in the history of the College for the remarkable display of loyalty and generosity of its members. In less than a year the sum of over £100,000 has been subscribed by alumni and friends of the College for the appeal for the College Development Plan. This sum which has come mainly from old members in the form of seven year covenants will enable the College to proceed with the building in Pembroke Street to increase the rooms available for undergraduates which is our primary need. We hope at the same time to be able to build a boathouse to replace the College Barge.

In promoting the appeal the College engaged the professional services of Messrs. Hooker and Craigmyle. We are the first Oxford College to use this form of professional assistance but several Cambridge Colleges have employed them. During the year the Master and Vicegerent have visited most parts of the country for meetings with alumni and dinners were also held by the Master at his house for the members of many of the regional committees. The regional committees asked Pembroke men in the area to serve as helpers in order that our brochure might be distributed so far as possible personally and not just by post. Where this has not been possible the brochure has been sent with a personal letter from the Master.

By the end of October the helpers were asked to return the names of any whom they had not been able to visit or to find and these members are now being written to by the Master. It was of the essence of our method of approach that the appeal should be accomplished quickly and not allowed to drag on and become boring. I trust that we have fulfilled our promise in that respect.

On behalf of the Master and Fellows I would like to express our warmest thanks to all who have assisted in the work of the appeal and to all who have contributed so generously. One effect of the work on the appeal has been to bring Pembroke men together by means of the various gatherings which have been held and by many personal contacts between individuals. The culmination of this was the party at the College on Saturday, 27th June. Invitations were sent to all alumni and on the day more than 600 guests of the College were present including wives and children. Over 100 were accommodated for the night in College.

In May 1963 the Master and the Vicegerent, Mr. Bredin, visited the United States and held dinners for Pembroke men in New York and Washington. Dr. James Hester, President of New York University, spoke at the New York meeting and Senator Fulbright at Washington.

The year 1964 has been notable in the academic progress of the College. In the final examination seven Pembroke men were placed in the First Class, three in the sciences and four in arts. This is effective testimony to the intellectual vitality of the College. The number of seven absolutely may not seem very high but the year concerned was, for various reasons, an unusually small intake and the proportion of our men winning Firsts was 14% of the candidates entering. In August the principal newspapers published what is now the customary table of the performances of Oxford Colleges and from this it appeared that judging by the proportion of men winning Firsts Pembroke came fifth among all 28 Oxford Colleges. This is naturally a matter of the greatest satisfaction to the Fellows. The marked advance in academic proficiency has been the result of a firm determination on the part of the College to attract able scholars in all subjects, to select with care and to see that in all possible ways the College encourages and assists able students to do their best. Most important of all is that they should encourage each other. To know that the College can stand among the first six colleges of the University should be an incentive to their successors whether or not the same place can again be reached.

The following members of the College were placed in the First Class in the year 1964:

LEGACIES

During the past year the College has received legacies to the value of over £50,000.

Our Honorary Fellow, Lord Nuffield, who had been so generous a benefactor in his lifetime left a legacy of £10,000.

The Right Reverend A. B. Burrowes formerly Fellow and Chaplain left us a legacy of £2,000.

In January 1964 the College lost a loyal and distinguished member by the death of Mr. T. F. Heyworth, Classical Scholar of the College in 1909, later a solicitor in Manchester. Mr. Heyworth had been interested in our appeal for funds but had to decline the chairmanship of the Manchester Committee for reasons of health. By his will he left to the College the residue of his estate which his executors estimate at the figure of approximately £40,000. This is the largest bequest the College has received in the last thirty years and one of the largest in our history. I would like to express to his relatives the gratitude of the College for such generous assistance.

On 1st January 1963 the Bursar, Mr. G. R. F. Bredin was elected to the Office of Vicegerent of the College in place of Mr. R. F. V. Heuston. (See plate photograph.)

Every year an assay of the College Silver is undertaken by the Bursar assisted by Mr. E. J. Bond, shortly after the end of Trinity Term. The photograph shows the magnitude and magnificence of Pembroke's Collection.

MR. R. F. V. HEUSTON

In 1947 the College elected its first Fellow in Law and the choice fell on Mr. Heuston. He had then graduated at Dublin University with high distinction in Law and had started work as a graduate student at St. John's College, Cambridge. He began his work at Pembroke in Michaelmas Term 1947 and soon made his mark as an able tutor. On the death of Dr. Stallybrass of Brasenose he was called on at a very early age to be the editor of Salmond on Torts and two editions of this work have come from his hands and it holds as high a place as ever in the opinion of the legal world.

In 1964 he published his now well-known book, The Lives of the Lord Chancellors in the Twentieth Century, in which he is able to combine his legal learning with his wider political and constitutional interests. He has been a very active member of the Law Faculty examining for it more than once in the Final Honour School and the B.C.L.

Meanwhile his work as a tutor in Law for the College has steadily borne fruit and the distinctions won by Pembroke men in the Law School whether measured by Firsts or Prizes have grown frequent.

He has played a very full part in the life and government of the College and has served in the offices of Dean, Dean of Degrees and Vicegerent, and Tutor for Admissions.

The office of Tutor for Admissions in recent years has been unusually difficult. The University has changed the rules annually in an endeavour to make entrance more regular and simple for boys and schools. Elaborate negotiations with Cambridge have taken place and frequent consultations between Oxford Colleges. Mr. Heuston has aided the College through all this flux. We hope now that his successor in this office, Mr. Morris, will be able to work under clearer skies but the office will never be an easy one.

In January 1965 he leaves to fill a chair of Law at the University of Southampton where the department of Law is expanding. His departure will be a great loss to the College in every way. But not all Fellows can be expected to remain always in Oxford and when a College elects a future Professor it is evidence that it has elected well, as the distinction of Mr. Heuston in the world of legal studies abundantly testifies.

VISCOUNT NUFFIELD

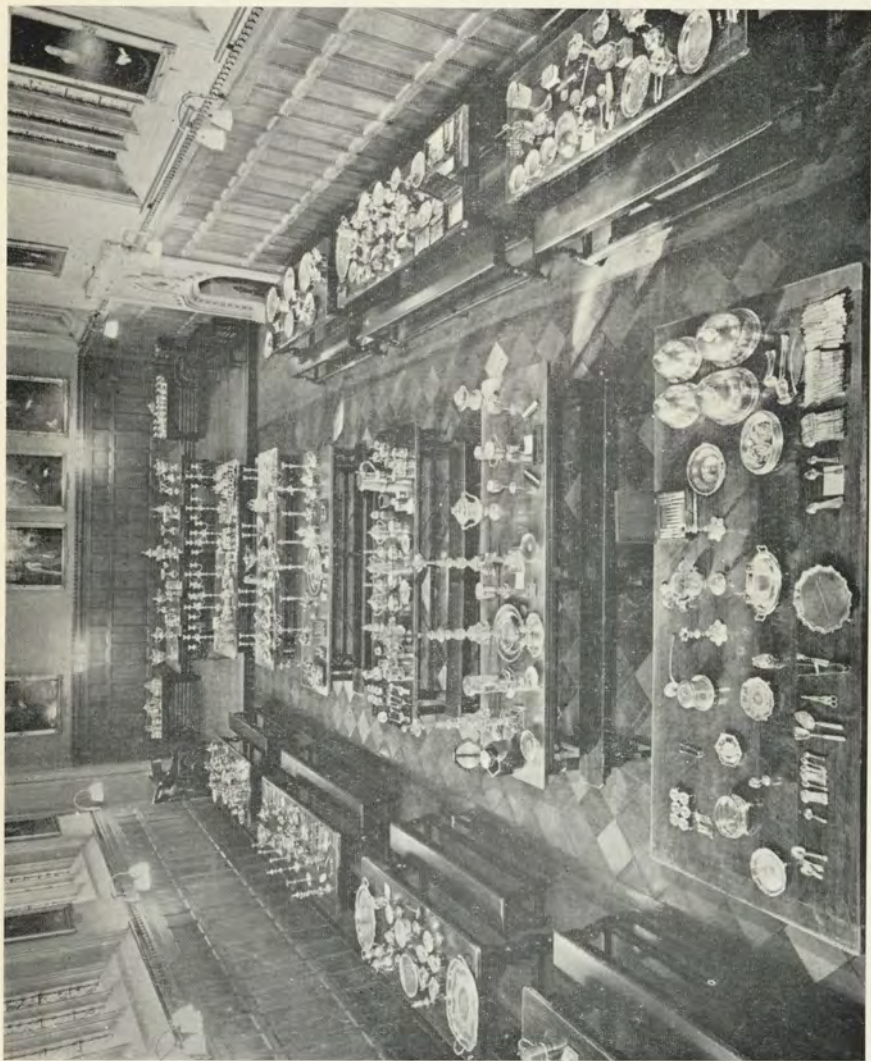

The death of this great industrialist and fount of charitable gifts has been widely celebrated and already a popular life has appeared to supplement the work of Mr. Philip Andrewes. In this Record we are concerned to remember him as one of the greatest of our benefactors. It is not generally known that our late Master, Dr. Homes Dudden, as Vice-Chancellor, with the late Professor Sir Farquhar Buzzard, took the initiative in bringing Sir William Morris, as he then was, into close touch with the University and conferred on him an Honorary Doctorate. It is well known what immense developments in medicine in Oxford flowed from this.

To the College, with certain other of the poorer colleges, in 1938 he gave a gift of £50,000. One use made of this was to disannex the Canonry of Gloucester which was joined with the Mastership. Later he also gave us the sum of £8,000 to endow medical scholarships. The revenues of this, with the comparable Theodore Williams Scholarship, has put Pembroke in the first place among Oxford scholarships in awards open only to intending doctors. Some years ago Lord Nuffield gave his permission to extend the uses of the steadily accumulating revenues to support a research fellowship in medical studies. We also owe to him a gift towards the remodelled kitchen of the College after the war. Through Dr. Dudden and Sir Robert Macintosh, who was a close friend, Pembroke saw more than most other colleges of Lord Nuffield and he dined with us from time to time. We also met him on several occasions when Sir Donald Finnemore, on assize, invited Lord Nuffield to dine in the Judge's Lodgings with the Fellows and resident Honorary Fellows.

He was certainly one of the most remarkable men I have ever met. Open, friendly and amiable in his manner, he had a real simplicity of character and also a kind of humility which by an odd conjunction joins him in my recollection with a very different type and personality, our late Visitor, Lord Halifax. Both were men of an extraordinary sincerity without any "front", facade or manner to stand between them and those they met. He was also a formidable man, one who impressed you by a kind of greatness, attested by his achievements and of which, under the extreme simplicity of his talk, you remained fully conscious. His most recent biographer, has stated that among classes whom he disliked, "with some exceptions", were University dons. Certainly I have heard him speak with uninhibited vigour of certain dons well known to me and I had the uneasy feeling that if I put myself forward in talk I would soon be classed with them. But one of the exceptions was Dr. Homes Dudden. He was a man of the world in the true sense of the phrase, one who in dealing with all sorts of men could treat them with perfect unselfconsciousness, free from the integuments of his own profession and personality. Masters and Vice-Chancellors come and go but we should not forget the service which our late Master performed to us and to the University in the part he played in relation to Lord Nuffield.

Lord Nuffield has been called the modern Maecenas. The term rings false. To compare him with the fastidious patrician of ancient Rome has little sense. He was rather in the line of those benefactors of learning of the period after the Protestant Reformation, men risen from yeomen stock by their own efforts to great affluence and concerned to further the education and charitable purposes of their society, usually with a secular bent. And of them he was the greatest, the most influential citizen from Oxford City since it first appears in historical annals in the tenth century.

ARNOLD BRIAN BURROWES

Pembroke men who were up in the period between the wars will vividly remember the Dean and Chaplain of their day, the bright, fairhaired, incredibly youthful don who watched over their spiritual needs and had a zealous care of their secular discipline. His period with us was only seventeen years of an active life, preceded by army service and undergraduate years at Corpus, followed by the Principalship of a theological college, some years as a chaplain with the Fleet Air Arm and finally as Bishop of St. Andrews in the Episcopal Church of Scotland. From that he retired in ill-health in 1955 and lived in Elgin where, while he was still able, he assisted in churches in his region.

We remember him in his Pembroke days. Although he had done well in the History school he was not invited to take any part in the teaching of that subject. He was busily employed in the teaching for Pass Moderations, then so large a business, and in certain Pass Groups. His innate modesty reconciled him to this somewhat humble role and he worked at it with great care, letting no bad Latin or inaccurate French pass his scrutiny. In those days we had no sermons in chapel, so none of us heard him preach but he preached at several schools, especially Glenalmond with whose then Warden he had close ties; he had been Burrowes' superior officer as a Cadet instructor. He was a good counsellor to those who intended Holy Orders and took the greatest interest in them.

His deanship was remarkable; undismayed by the disadvantage of his small stature, he held a firm hand over the most irrepressible and formidable rioters. Our Porter, Mr. Ponsford, who knew the College as no one else did in these days, has often told me of delinquents pounding up the stairs to face the Dean, determined that he should be told where to get off, and how five minutes later the same man would return crestfallen if not openly repentant. Burrowes had great moral courage and a form of it, rather rare among dons, that he was not afraid to be "schoolmasterly" to enforce a rule, to exact a severe penalty. He was often unpopular and had no fear of this but he was also respected and anyone in serious trouble would receive his christian sympathy. He had a bright and even impish humour, which generally gave him the last laugh. I recollect that one evening in Mr. Drake's room over our port it was hinted that Drake and Collingwood had grave matters to discuss, inappropriate to such youthful Fellows as us. He and I rose to leave but Burrowes turned at the door, "The children's hour is now over and we pass on to the Old Folks' fireside talk". For once Mr. Drake lost his usual monopoly of the last word. On another occasion in my room he asked me why I had a portrait of that very wicked man, Talleyrand, hanging there? I replied provocatively that while Talleyrand was by moral standards a wicked man yet on the whole he did more good than most statesmen of his time and I hung him as a reminder to my pupils that it was more important to be clever than to be good. Burrowes at once replied, "Yes, and you will bring up your own children in that principle will you?" This struck between wind and water.

In his last years I visited Burrowes once or twice in Elgin where he lived attended by a devoted couple. He took the liveliest interest in the College and would write to congratulate me on our growing academic success. He seemed smaller than ever and had latterly grown a reddish beard untinged with grey. Each visit showed him more frail. My last was in August 1963 and he received me with his usual affection and courtesy but he could come no further than the door of his room when I left and even that was an effort. We spoke of meeting again but as I walked sadly to the station I feared the meeting would not take place. And so it was; he died on 15th November, 1963, much mourned by all his friends, near and far.

By his will he left the College a legacy of £2,000; the Governing Body has resolved that the first charge on this should be certain repairs and improvements in the Chapel where for so long he carried out his ministry with unflinching zeal and piety.

L. E. SALT

Lionel Edgar Salt, sometime Fellow and Bursar of the College, was born on 1st October, 1879. One of the youngest of twelve sons of a solicitor he went to Shrewsbury School from where he won a classical scholarship to Trinity College, Oxford.

After taking an Honours Degree in Greats, followed by one in Modern History, he was called to the Bar.

Disqualified by deafness from active service he served throughout the 1914-18 war in the Ministry of Munitions. In 1922 he was appointed Fellow and Bursar of the College and held the post until his final retirement in 1950. Throughout his twenty-eight years of office he carried upon his shoulders the full burden of the finance and administration of the College, without accounting or secretarial help of any kind, disposing of each detail himself with characteristic and unflinching accuracy.

During his bursarship Pembroke emerged from a period of severe financial strain into one of moderate security, and his care and prudence enabled the College not only to face the post 1945 problems, but to lay the foundation for its future vigorous expansion.

Not content with discharging singlehanded his heavy bursarial duties he undertook to compile a register of all members of the College since its foundation. No College Register prior to 1888 had been in existence, and Salt's self-imposed task extended over many laborious months. It was completed in 1934, is referred to constantly by his grateful successor, and stands as a monument to the industry of a devoted servant of the College.

A man of diverse interests, a musician, a scholar and an active and skilful games player, Salt had a large circle of friends. Until increasing deafness caused him to withdraw more and more into the seclusion of the rooms in College which he continued to occupy as an Emeritus Fellow, he was a very welcome colleague in the Senior Common Room where his wide reading and varied experience enabled him to find common grounds for conversation with any guest.

He retained to the end an unflinching interest in Pembroke and its affairs, and it is fitting that until a few hours of his death (on 25th January, 1963, at the age of 83) he should have been able to live within the walls of the College which he had served so long and so well.

W. H. PONSFORD AND V. DUESTER

During the month of March 1964 the College suffered the loss of two greatly beloved members of its staff. The first was William Ponsford, known to so many generations of Pembroke men as he kept his strict but understanding watch in the Lodge, acting as guide, philosopher and friend to all alike.

After his retirement he gladly undertook any task which kept him in touch with the College, and for years the members of the Pembroke Society received their notices of the London Dinner addressed in his characteristic and unvarying script.

Victor Duester, in a good day for the College, came to under-study Duke in the Senior Common Room. In due course he took over, maintaining to the full the high traditions set by his predecessor, and just as we thought that this department of the College would be admirably served by him for years to come he was overtaken by sickness and died after an operation.

Both were tended with unselfish and unflagging care by devoted wives, and their names will live long in the affectionate memories of Pembroke men everywhere.

TOLL FOR THE BARGE

It is painful to record that the Lutine Bell failed to announce at Lloyd's the total loss of this stalwart old vessel, scene of so much Pembroke hospitality. There are many still who recall the sunny days of 60 years ago and more, when the Eight went off to make bumps in the first division (there were only two divisions) and the Pembroke Barge was a rendezvous for pretty frocks and wonderful hats and parasols.

In its youthful bloom the Barge was quite the prettiest in the whole line . . . which is saying a lot. Dolph Talboys was the waterman, loving the boats and plying his great pole with nonchalant skill to ferry us across. Oxford then took Eights Week seriously—six nights, Thursday, Friday, Saturday, Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday.

The Barge's great adventure was its voyage to Henley in 1906. As the VIII, with a Blue and two Trials caps had made five bumps, it was decided to enter for the Ladies Plate and the Thames Cup, and the Barge journeyed to Henley, squeezing through the locks, to be moored on the Oxfordshire bank, a little below Phyllis Court. The crew lodged in Sargasso House, Somers-Smith was coach, and Oliver Blunkett spare man. With its awning the Barge made a charming clubhouse. A. L. Lee and the writer (two and bow) recall a 'buck lunch' served aboard on Ladies' Day.

The crew raced three times on the first day, a dead heat with Kingston R.C. in the Thames, a win against Radley in the Ladies, and was defeated by only two feet in the evening by Kingston. It was only the 3rd dead heat rowed at Henley.

The Barge found passage through the locks somewhat awkward, and sustained minor damage on the journey. Since then it has stayed at home. Later generations of rowing men will recall the pride which East took in the Barge and the crews, and the care he lavished on the job of being our waterman, with paint-pot, screwdriver, shovel, baling can and barge pole.

Eheu fugaces, Postume, Postume. . . .

Oh for the years that are lost to me, lost to me. . . .

PEMBROKE COLLEGE EIGHTS WEEK DANCE 1964
AN APPEAL

The general tendency this year seems to have been to judge the dance a success. The aim next year is to make it an even greater success, and so to go from strength to strength. I would ask that you give the dance equal support again next year, so that in the future we can build the Pembroke Dance into a financially paying concern. As you know this year's result was the best for some time. Only you can make it an even better result in 1965.

MICHAEL DEWAR

(Secretary to the Dance Committee)

SPORTING ACTIVITIES

BOAT CLUB

1962-3. Captain: J. D. Jones; Secretary: J. O. Kerr.

A disappointing year with only a small lasting intake of freshmen. The club suffered from the cancellation of Torpids and from a serious lack of experienced members. Unhappily the Eight did not live up to expectations or the promise of practice.

1963-4. Captain: N. K. Maybury; Secretary: M. M. Baker.

A valuable year in which the lack of third year coaching members and the rapid downward progress of our crews were to a large extent overcome. The club now has a new shell VIII and the services of an invaluable boatman; this and the general enthusiasm and interest fostered by Eights promises well for the future. Given some experienced freshmen, determination and discipline, under outside coaches, will be essential factors in the achieving of success next year.

RUGBY CLUB

1962-3. Captain: A. V. Antonovics; Secretary: D. F. C. Murphy.

Fair season only, although good freshmen intake.

1963-4. Captain: D. F. C. Murphy; Secretary: N. R. Phelps.

Talented freshmen were added to a core of experience and after an excellent season promotion was gained to Division II. The tour to the Channel Islands was very successful. N. R. Phelps was elected a Greyhound.

FOOTBALL CLUB

1962-3. Captain: P. Herriot; Secretary: B. Romeril.

A good season—we very narrowly missed promotion.

1963-4. Captain: B. Romeril; Secretary: D. Gray.

A disappointing season in which we were relegated to the 3rd Division. A promising future as we have most of the team with us next year.

ATHLETICS CLUB

1962-3. Captain: V. Kumar; Secretary: R. Keeling.

1963-4. Captain: R. Keeling; Secretary: M. J. Monk.

The Club has not been flourishing of late because other College sports have prior claims on many potential athletes. Athletic Cuppers 1964 clashed with Rugger Cuppers so we were unable to enter a team. However, in October 1963, we won Division III of the Inter-College Relays, and we were well represented in the Inter-College Cross Country League. With more support we could do well in the future.

CRICKET CLUB

1962-3. Captain: K. F. R. Lofthouse; Secretary: N. R. Phelps.

A good season: the team played well on most occasions—some good individual performances.

1963-4. Captain: N. R. Phelps; Secretary: G. Millar.

Another good season, with the standard of play much higher—some good wins. Although there were no outstanding performances, we now have a core of very good players.

HOCKEY CLUB

1962-3. Captain: D. B. Moody; Secretary: D. R. D. Johnson.

Michaelmas was a barren term and only nine matches were played—4 won, 3 lost, 2 drew. The snow in Hilary Term made pitches unfit to play on.

1963-4. Captain: D. R. D. Johnson; Secretary: P. J. Price.

Beaten by Trinity in 1st round of Cuppers by 1-0 in extra time. Came 5th in Division 3 of the league competition. Players found their form difficult to find, but morale increased by three sparkling victories at the end of the season—S.E.H. crushed 7-1. All round a fluctuating season.

TENNIS CLUB

1962-3. Captain: M. Gilsenan; Secretary: R. D. A. Pick.

The tennis VI had a very successful season and, having lost only league match, was promoted to the 2nd Division. The team also reached the quarter finals of Cuppers where they were narrowly beaten by S.E.H.

J. S. Beer was elected to the Penguins L.T.C.

1963-4. Captain: R. D. A. Pick; Secretary: J. S. Beer.

This season was not so successful due partly to a lack of freshmen players; the team lost three matches and won five. In the 4th round of Cuppers we were beaten by Keble 5-4.

SQUASH CLUB

1962-3. Captain: O. R. Stansfield; Secretary: R. D. A. Pick.

A very good season with some very promising players.

1963-4. Captain: R. D. A. Pick; Secretary: G. Millar.

The Club failed to get any promotion, but otherwise had a successful season in which some 45 matches were played. O. R. Stansfield was Secretary of, and played regularly for, the Squirrels—the O.U. 2nd team.

MISCELLANEOUS

In the first week of June, Pembroke combined with St. Peter's and St. Anne's for a production of Jean Anouilh's "Ring Round the Moon", given in the gardens of the Victoria Arms, Old Marston. Although bad weather harmed the attendance, the production was well received.
