Principal Components of the Anointed Smile

Kanna Kanna is a succulent plant found mostly in the southern regions of Africa. Native cultures have always regarded this plant as holy owing to its mood-enhancing properties. It is a member of the Mesembryanthemaceae family, and its scientific name is Sceletium tortuosum.

Primarily, the aboriginal tribes utilized it for ceremonies, such as the rite of passage. Presently, Kanna is available as a dietary supplement. Its capacity to alleviate stress, anxiety, and sadness has led to a huge rise in its popularity, which in turn has enhanced happiness.

The herb has various more advantages, including:

Stress Relief

Kanna primarily targets the brain and neurological system as a whole. It promotes the synthesis of serotonin, a neurotransmitter hormone. Serotonin is important for regulating moods. The amount of serotonin in the body decreases with age, creating tension and anxiety.

It inhibits the actions of the PDE4 enzyme, which is responsible for the reabsorption of serotonin hormone into the cells after its release.

Eliminates symptoms of depression

According to the World Health Organization in 2020, depression affects about 260 million individuals worldwide. Doctors diagnose depression using symptoms. The most prevalent symptoms of depression include low mood, chronic sorrow, and a sense of hopelessness. The depressive episode is the time during which an individual has depressed symptoms.

Depression causes a lack of interest in everyday tasks, resulting in decreased productivity. In many instances, individuals develop bad eating habits, insomnia, and low self-esteem. Psychiatrists feel that Kanna may help minimize the severity of depression by improving an individual's mood.

Palmitoylethanolamide (PEA) (PEA)

PEA is a lipid-derived molecule. It is found naturally in foods like egg yolks and almonds. It is used to treat a variety of forms of pain, fibromyalgia, and infections. It functions by attaching to cells to decrease inflammation-induced swelling and discomfort.

PEA affects many chemical receptors in the body to generate the desired effects. Anandamide, one of the principal compounds, creates a hormone known as the runner's high. During workouts, the runner's high chemical is responsible for the calm sensation.

The elderly generate less PEA, resulting in diminished production of the runner's high chemical. The PEA in the supplement anointed smile aids in the creation of anandamide, which makes you feel happy throughout the day.

Lithium Sodium Orotate

The chemical lithium orotate comprises lithium and orotic acid. Lithium orotate is a natural treatment for a number of cognitive problems. It is used to aid in the prevention and reduction of episodes in bipolar individuals.

Mentally sick individuals' moods are elevated and they experience a relaxing effect as a result of the chemical. Additionally, it promotes good aging and cognitive wellness. These characteristics make it a great addition to the blessed smile supplement.
