Vegan Food Festival, Vine Gardens

The earliest known reporting of cricket in Sevenoaks is a report in the London Evening Post of a match between the Gentlemen of Kent and Sussex, which took place on 6th September 1734.

On that occasion it was Lord John Philip Sackville who pitted his team and his purse against the Gentlemen of Sussex. The Sackvilles of Knole were among the many aristocracy of the day who matched their XIs against neighbouring estates for high stakes, which could be as much as 1,000 guineas.

In 1773, John Frederick Sackville, the 3rd Duke of Dorset and a great patron of the game, presented the Vine Ground out of the Knole Estate to the town of Sevenoaks to be a cricket ground forever.

In 1777, the 18th June saw the introduction of the third stump on The Vine. In 1850 the Pavilion was built, now a Grade II listed building.

In 1894 the Bandstand was built. The former Practice Room was recently turned into the Café on the Vine.

Seven oak trees were planted here to commemorate the coronation of King Edward VII in 1902 and six had to be replaced after the hurricane of 1987.

The actual name of The Vine is a mystery, but possibly relates to the existence of a vineyard near the Ground in the 14th Century when the Knole estates were owned by the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Sevenoaks Town Council took over the management of the Vine Cricket Ground and Vine Gardens on its formation in 1974.
