BY MICHAEL W. ALDRICH

School's Back! Has Your Kid Picked Out Their Backpack?

It wasn't anything fancy — just a patchwork of red, green and blue nylon material with a few zippered pockets.

But I remember my first backpack. I remember filling it with crayons, No. 2 pencils and a Star Wars folder before my first day of kindergarten. I remember proudly wearing it on my back, feeling like a big kid and reluctantly putting it in my cubby that first day. Before too long, I remember it becoming a place for all my treasures (like Pokémon cards, Pogs, cool looking rocks, etc.).

Whether it's covered in superheroes or pink ponies, a kid's first backpack is a rite of passage — one of the first places they can call their own. So this month, as students of all ages go through a similar back-to-school ritual, I thought I'd bring up a name you've probably never heard of: Murray McCorry, a Washington native and avid outdoorsman credited with inventing and popularizing the lightweight backpack.

In 1967, McCorry founded JanSport, the company that produced the first backpacks to sell to college students across the country, then to high schoolers and grade schoolers, too.

While McCorry died last fall in Seattle at the age of 80, the backpack he created is still considered an essential accessory for students. It basically revolutionized school life for several generations of kids, including mine.

Even so, the backpack has carried a few controversies with it through the years.

As the bags got bigger and the loads heavier, there's evidence that they contributed to neck, back and shoulder pains in some children. Healthcare professionals warned that they could be a health risk to kids, especially if the cargo wasn't proportional to a student's size, and issued health guidelines for parents. The creation of wheeled backpacks was another response.

Nowadays, security concerns have been another challenge for backpacks and how they're used in schools. Some administrators require students to carry clear or mesh versions so they can't be used to transport weapons or drugs.

But for me, backpacks are both a practical tool and a nostalgic reminder of my schooling. To this day, the sight of a youngster toting one back to school conjures up memories of the array of packs I've carried — from a Michael Jordan model in my early years to a later version covered with doodles I did with a Sharpie.

The point is ... backpacks serve a bigger purpose than simply storage. They're a way for a kid to express themselves and show their personality. They're a way for a kid to bring a little bit of home with them to school. And they're a way for a kid to connect with other backpack-wearing, soon-to-be-friends at school.

So, does your kid(s) have their backpack(s) ready for the new school year? Did they pick it out? Will they be wearing it with one strap over their shoulder (that's how the kids used to do it in my day) or two?

My soon-to-be first grader has a navy blue and green backpack with yellow pockets on each side. I recently asked him if he wanted to pick out a new one and he said, "No, daddy. I want the one I have because it's mine and I love it."

Couldn't have said it better myself.

Michael

FEED BACK

Childhood is fleeting and we often don't remember a lot. So ...

“It was easy. No responsibilities, no expectations, just being super chill. I miss being a kid.”

Wendy Test

“Spreading Elmer's glue on my hand, letting it dry and peeling it off ... so satisfying!”

Bram Johnson

“Fire drills.”

Brooke Swennson

“‘Criss cross applesauce. ‘Hand goes up, mouth goes shut,’ ‘You will give me your undivided attention,’ ‘In this special installment,’ ‘Heads up 7-up’ and boy/girl seating on the bus.”

April Morrell

“Going to the principal's office to take my Ritalin dose at lunch and the girl who went with me always fake took her's. Also, riding my new bike to school after Christmas and this kid saying, ‘You think you're so cool but you're not.’ And in fifth grade, our whole long row at lunch (about 30 – 40) kids had to stay through recess because we had a food fight.”

Eugene Hiller

“When I was in first grade, I was missing my mom after lunch period. My teacher came to me and asked what happened. After that, I started crying and hugged her hip because I was short then. She just let me hug her and consoled me not to cry. She was the nicest teacher I ever had. I have never felt that warmth when crying and hugging someone at the same time that I felt during that day with my teacher.”

Bonnie Emilius

“The one kid who smelled like sour milk.”

Gerilynn Fish

“The smell of fresh copies that the teacher handed out. And they were warm, too, fresh from the copy machine.”

Dori Jean Warren

“My class was in the gym playing freeze tag. I was running with my best friend when the tagger ran right in front of us. I'm not sure what happened to my friend, but I fell forward and smacked my head on the hard, cold floor. I was pretty out of it for the day and remember my gym teacher asking if I've ever done a somersault before. That was probably a concussion, but nobody did a thing.”

Elizabeth Jackowitz

“I remember using overhead projectors, chalkboards, paste in little glass baby food jars, and them playing ‘The Star-Spangled Banner’ over the intercom every morning. Today is a whole different world.”

Carrie Tuft

“I remember liking Field Day. It was a once-a-year event which had a bunch of events like a 50-yard dash, long throw, soccer dribble competitions, jump rope competitions, etc. You'd get a ribbon for first through third place and everyone would compare how many they got at the end of the day. It was a lot of fun.”

Sarah Stolberg

“Mrs. Deckler rolling chalk between her hands and it click, click, clicking against her ring. Just mesmerizing.”

THE DADSIDE

BY NOAH DAY

What We Mean to Them

I will never forget when I first held my daughter.

It was an intense experience, overall. When she finally arrived after 27 hours of induced labor, the administered medication was still causing contractions for my wife, and as a result, she was in immense pain, even after delivery. So, after nine grueling months of daily morning (or all day) sickness, aches, pains and a plethora of other symptoms, our baby was here. But my amazing wife, filled with joy, couldn't hold her newborn baby. Sheesh.

This meant that I was called into action quicker than I anticipated. I can still hear the nurses speaking those strange and wonderful words: "Alright, Dad, we're going to give her to you now."

It was hard to keep up with all the changes happening so suddenly, but I do remember thinking, "Uh-oh, you're talking to me? Me as in Dad? Oh yikes, you are. I guess I am the only dad in the room!" And sure enough, they placed the tiniest human being I'd ever seen right on my bare chest.

This brand new baby girl was screaming (as is very common) and I didn't know what to do. "Hey, hey, hey, it's OK – it's OK, it's OK." Almost instantly, she stopped.

"Do you know why she stopped crying?" asked the nurse. "She knows your voice."

Sure enough, as I looked down, all I could focus on was this little face with her mouth wide open staring curiously up at me, as if lost in wonder. Her tiny hand gently grasped my chest and then, it hit me: I spent the past nine months (and even longer) thinking about how much this baby would mean to me and it never really occurred to me just how much I would mean to her.

As I got more and more comfortable holding her, she eventually stopped looking up at me, surrendered herself and put her head down to sleep against my chest. I was accepted as "Dad," and euphoria set in. The weeks and months soon to follow would be long nights and sleepy days — but for just a second, the world stopped (thankfully, the contractions stopped for my wife, too) and our relationship bloomed.

I've thought about that moment quite a bit in the two-and-a-half years since. I'll never forget the way our baby looked at me knowing that I'm her superhero — an unstoppable force who knows everything and does the impossible. Soon (though I'm not quite sure when), she'll find out the truth, which is that I'm not a superhero and am simply piecing it together as best as I can as I go. We'll cross that bridge when we get there.

I am convinced that throughout every step in life, our kids will never know just how much they mean to us and all the more, we'll never fully know just how much we mean to them.

“Mom! Will You Bring Me My Chromebook, Please?”

... and Smart Considerations for a Successful New School Year Launch

That text message was sent by my eighth-grade son. Out of my three kids, he wasn't even the worst offender for forgetting things. His twin sister easily won that prize by texting me to bring her homework, lunch or gym clothes twice as often as he did. “I'm on my way,” I would respond. My twins will be 14 soon, and as much as I hate to admit it, this had to end. I knew I needed to devise a plan to wean them (and me) off of their “mom butler services.”

The reason I use the word “wean” is because I'm not the type of person who can just jump into a cold pool. I'm the one who wades in gradually while my three kids yell in unison, “Just dunk your body into the water! Go in, already!” Despite their cajoling, I always waded in at my own moderate pace.

When my twins were in first grade, the school phone number popped up on the caller ID. And I did what any parent does when they see the school phone number — I panicked. Are they hurt? Are they sick? Are they in trouble? I expected to hear the voice of the principal or a teacher or any type of authority figure but instead, the sound of a 6-year-old girl's voice emitted through the speaker.

“Mom, Can you please bring me my homework?”

“Of course, sweetie, I'll be right over.” And so it began.

BACK TO SCHOOL

Before I drove to the school that first time, my husband said, "Don't bring it to her."

Really? He was the "yes man". The one who allowed our kids to climb up that steep, wobbling ladder attached to an equally steep slide. He's the guy that buys them more than $50 worth of movie theater candy because he doesn't want to say, "No, you can't have all of that". Does he really want me to say, "No" to something that seemed pretty benign to me?

"She needs to learn to remember to bring it and you bringing her homework doesn't help her to do that," he said. "If you bring it to her, she learns that her mom will always bail her out," he added sagely.

My first reaction to this was, "What is wrong with her thinking her mom will always bail her out?" But then after giving it some more thought, I knew he was right.

I just couldn't say, "No" though. Instead, my mama-bear instinct kicked in and I had to protect her from getting into trouble, so I brought her homework to the school. And I continued to do so when any of my three children called because they forgot their jacket, lunch or gym clothes. I couldn't let them freeze, starve or not participate.

Two years ago, I read an article about how a Catholic boys' school posted a sign on the door that read:

"If you are dropping off your son's forgotten lunch, books, homework, equipment, etc., please TURN AROUND and exit the building. Your son will learn to problem-solve in your absence."

My initial thought was, I wish our school posted that sign because then it would absolve me of my guilt if I didn't bring it.

But at the same time, I wanted to be able to help my kids when they asked me for help.

The school my kids attend allowed them to use the phone to call me when they were younger (before they had phones of their own). If I chose to not to bring an item, I felt like I was not being supportive of the school.

Now that my twins are in eighth grade, my husband's sentiments are resonating stronger

SCHOOL RESPONSIBILITY PLAN!

- If you choose to use a pass I will bring your forgotten item to school for you.

Before you go, did you remember to bring:

Your Homework
Your Books
Your Chromebook
Your Lunch
Your Gym Clothes
Your Practice Gear
Your Instrument

with me.

In five years, they may be going to college. Unless they live at home, I won't be able to bring their forgotten item to class for them. So, I created my own sign and taped it to the front door (see above).

I'm cautiously optimistic that my new plan will enable my kids to be more responsible and facilitate an early retirement for "Butler Mom." I realize it is a growing process for all of us that I need to do at my own moderate pace. There will likely be setbacks when they ask for a forgotten lunch (a mom's worst fear is to have a starving child), but hopefully, we will be able to stay the course.

With any luck, by the time they are in college, I will only have to drive there to see their smiling faces. Unless of course, they text me from an unknown number saying, "Mom, can you please bring me my phone?"

I would respond immediately, "I'm on my way."

After all, I need to be able to call them.

BACK-TO-SCHOOL CHECKLIST

Believe it or not, it takes a lot of planning to make school days run smoothly ... or, you'll spend more hours in the car than you already do. Here are great ideas for smooth sailing during the busy fall months:

- Make a list of lunch and dinner ideas and stock up.

- Set up a homework/study spot whether it's at the kitchen table or a nook in the living room.

- Have school supplies on hand that your child needs.

- Start a filing system for yourself (for each of your kids) for event flyers, pictures, awards, etc. This will make storing and finding items simple.

- Review the school calendar and add important dates to your personal calendar. This way, you'll know when you need to take PTO for work or need additional childcare.

- Work out weekly schedules, pick-up/drop-off needs with your kids, keeping sports and extra curriculars in mind.

- Review school safety protocols with your kids.

- Attend the teacher meet-and-greets.

- Plan weekly outfits with your kids.

- Work on meeting other parents who may be able to get into a carpool with you if your schedule is crazy.

- Discuss applying yourself in school with each child.

The notion that education prioritizes academics and athletics is being challenged by the rapid advancement of artificial intelligence. Now, a greater focus on creativity, critical thinking and adaptability for kids brings the human edge — that only the arts can provide — to the foreground.

If I have observed one thing after a decade of having a school-age child, it's that arts-motivated kids perform better in school. Sure, my daughter comes from an artsy family already. Her mom is a writer and her dad is a theater director, but she's not an extension of us; she is uniquely herself, and her exposure to a wide variety of arts helps her discover her own passions, proclivities and personhood.

The more types of arts my daughter engages in, the happier and more motivated of a student she becomes overall, even in her most challenging academic classes. But don't take my word for it. Check out the messages broadcasted prolifically by Sir Ken Robinson, author of the book, Finding Your Element: How To Discover Your Talents & Passions and Transform Your Life. One of the most popular TED speakers and a creativity and education expert, Robinson asserts that the job of education is to teach children to become creative thinkers rather than merely good workers.

In addition to Robinson's theory that a child's exposure to a steady stream of their talents and passions leads to finding future work right in their element, we must remember something else: The greatest challenges faced by civilization are going to be solved by our kids one day. Do we want them to behave like well-behaved workers or do we want them to become the creative thinkers, problem-solvers and innovators they were born to be?

Participation in the arts is just as important to raising well-rounded children as participation in academics and athletics. The arts awaken personal power in children by helping them discover their talents and passions organically. I know this is true because my daughter loves to sing, dance, act and draw already. Recently, she's also started reading Shakespeare, watching historical documentaries, playing the piano and taking hip-hop classes.

I am not bragging. But I am keenly aware that I may have been inadvertently putting imagined limits on just how creative my daughter could become. Now, thanks to her example, I am beginning to think that there isn't anything she can't do. And isn't that exactly what I want her to believe?

Why do we put limits on our kids' creative impulses when creative activities clearly benefit real-world performance? My daughter

EVERY NEEDS

THEY WILL NOT BE ROBOTS: Fine arts, music, theater and dance and perspectives in ways that artificial intelligence cannot. The arts fosters has got the rest of her life to discover and pursue creative activities that light her up from the inside and inspire her to be the best she can be. My job as her mom — between now and the day she ventures out into the world — is to make sure she never runs out of opportunities to practice being her multi-faceted self. She can sift and sort through what she likes best and doesn't prefer for herself. She doesn't need me for that, except to remind her that how she spends her time and energy in life is her choice.

When I leave this world some day, I want to depart knowing I exposed my daughter to as much personal enjoyment of life as I could. And the arts will have played a leading role in this endeavor. I don't want my daughter's focus in life to be on survival or drudgery; I want her life to be a celebration of being herself. And, in order to allow kids to explore and express feelings, experiences emotional intelligence and a deeper understanding of the world.

do this, she has to explore and assess her talents and abilities in her own ways.

If you deny your kids access to the arts — or don't see them as valuable for them — maybe because you think creativity is less important or less valuable than, say, football, I hope you are planning to stick around for a few more decades to witness for yourself the important role creativity will play in the evolution of our future.

If you are, as I was, inadvertently capping the amount of creative activities your kids participate in to levels deemed reasonable, I hope you will stop. Instead of cutting the arts out of your kids' schedules, we need to allow access to as much arts activity as a child's schedule permits. They can set the bar to a level that feels right from there.

25 CREATIVE ACTIVITIES FOR KIDS

Please don't be confused about whose job it is to expose kids to the arts. Arts engagement is YOUR job first, before teachers or instructors get involved. Engage your children in the arts and watch the magic happen. They will thank you for your encouragement today and in the future with smiles and feelings of contentment.

 Where Every Family Matters

Q & A: Dr. James Jordan

As the Episcopal School of Nashville approaches its 10th anniversary, Head of School Dr. James Jordan reflects on a decade of growth and looks ahead to what's next.

Nestled in the heart of East Nashville lies the Episcopal School of Nashville (ESN). Known for its inclusive Episcopal identity, urban setting and commitment to nurturing curiosity and character, ESN offers families a unique school experience rooted in academic excellence and emotional intelligence. With Head of School Dr. James Jordan at the helm for nearly five years, ESN has continued to carve out a special place in Nashville's education scene.

Now in preparations for celebrating 10 years of ESN, northern England native Dr. Jordan sat down with Nashville Parent to share more about the school's mission, milestone moments, future challenges and the exciting path that lies ahead.

(please turn the page)

NP: What sets ESN apart from other schools in the area?

JJ: There is no other Episcopal school in Nashville. We are unapologetically Christian, but we are not trying to indoctrinate anybody. We have Catholics, Methodists, Congregationalists and students of no faith tradition. All are welcome under the umbrella of an Episcopal School. We focus on academics, social justice, and inclusion in a place where everybody is welcome.

Our baptismal covenant demands of us to strive for justice and peace among all peoples and to respect the dignity of every human being, period. And this is not something that we made up here in Nashville. It is a tradition that goes back centuries to England. You can come here and you can be yourself. We have all kinds of family structures, socio-economic backgrounds, races, and countries where students are from. The cool thing about ESN is that you don't have to check any of that at the door.

In terms of our academics, we're very hands on. We're very careful about technology. We believe that interaction and hands-on experiential learning is really important, especially for young children. And a screen is not a solution. A screen can be a tool to help you achieve an educational objective, but it's not the end. It's a means to an end.

NP: What is a common misconception that people have of Episcopal schools?

JJ: Faith-based schools get a hard rap. People growing up may have had certain feelings or been made to feel a certain way, like, "Hey, if you don't believe exactly these things, then you're less than." The Episcopal tradition seeks to tear down those barriers. Like I said before, you don't have to be a Christian to come to this school. You don't have to be an Episcopalian to come to this school. We believe that diversity is our strength, and diversity can take many forms. We're socioeconomically diverse, and we put our money where our mouth is, with a lot of need-based financial aid. We want to be racially diverse. We want to be diverse with ideas and perspectives. We want our students to be critical thinkers. The Episcopal way is the middle way, so there is truth on all sides.

NP: Looking back on nearly a decade of ESN, what key milestones has the school achieved, and what are your goals for the future?

JJ: We started with 16 students in two trailers in the parking lot of a church in 2016 with literally a wing and a prayer. Today, we are in the Ross Elementary building. Our target is 140 students for this upcoming year, and each year we've grown.

Our theme for year 10 is "Purpose, Promise and Possibility." We started out as that young, scrappy school, and now we're in the phase of really thinking big. We're embarking on a strategic planning process that will set the course for the next three-to-five years. What we've done really well in the last year or so is creating the shared understanding of, "What does Episcopal actually mean, and how does that tie into what we do?"

We are working to make our academic program as rigorous as possible. This year, we're implementing a new math program. Next year, we're going to really dive into language arts. As an independent school, we get to determine our own mission, and how to carry out that mission. We can teach what we want — no book bans here. There's no, "You must do this. You can't do that." We're a community of choice and values, and we want our curriculum, people, programs and practices to reflect those values. We're really dedicating ourselves to the mind, body and spirit of every young person, so that when they leave us after sixth grade, they're prepared to go to any of the great public or private schools in Nashville and thrive, and people will say, "That's an ESN kid." That'll make us proud.

“I was in an AI workshop recently, and oh my goodness. In the elementary sphere, it's a little easier for us to double down on social, emotional and academic skills and less on technology.”

We're also looking at a permanent facility. I would love to have a soccer field, a gym, a chapel — in the longer term, we're looking at a campus for ESN.

NP: Where do you see education going for this next generation of learners; how are you addressing that at ESN?

JJ: I was in an AI workshop recently, and oh my goodness. In the elementary sphere, it's a little easier for us to really double down on social, emotional, and academic skills and less on technology. Education is relational, right? We serve students as young as 3, and they're learning to take their turn, play nicely and respect others. As they get a little bit older, they're learning to use their words instead of their hands or their bodies, which a computer will never replace. We believe in the concept of community, and that will not change.

In terms of the future of the country, we want to educate our students for the world that we want to live in. In 10 plus years, we want people to be able to disagree and still feel that they're friends. We don't want to live in a polarized society. It all comes back to relationships and being able to articulate oneself, receive feedback and reflect. To create a space for students to do that in communion with others who value them as a human being, and maybe disagree with the idea that they have about one thing or another, but are a part of this community of humanity. My hope is that we build on that, rather than getting into a more transactional model of education where it's a factory. Education is personal and it's interpersonal, and especially for this age group of elementary and early childhood, it needs to be in a loving environment where every single child is known, valued and loved with the opportunity to be themselves.

NP: What excites you most about leading this community?

JJ: It's the type of school I wish I'd gone to growing up. It's the type of community that I would want my children to go to, because regardless of who they are or what they're interested in, they're going to be valued as a human being. They're going to have that sense of self. We're intentional about relationships and community building, and it's only going to get stronger.

Southern Stars Preschool

Our curriculum allows you and your child to grow at an individual pace. While many preschools focus on a singular facet of learning, we focus on every facet of learning, including: gross motor skills, fine motor skills, social skills, verbal skills, concentration and focus skills, literacy skills, match and history skills, art, music, and dance skills, and play-based learning.
