Walking Tour

Welcome to Oxford College

At Oxford College of Emory University, wonder is encouraged and curiosity is essential. This is where good things come to those who seek. Here, you'll uncover the unexpected through small classes and faculty mentorship. Our fully residential campus creates the perfect environment for interdisciplinary discovery, where living and learning strengthen each other. It's more than just the beginning of your Emory journey — it's the foundation for who you'll become.

The tour moves counterclockwise around the Quad, starting at Hopkins Hall and ending at Williams Gym.

15. Hopkins Hall

Hopkins Hall was built in 1885 during the presidency of Isaac Stiles Hopkins to house his pioneering technology department. Hopkins left Emory to serve as the first president of Georgia Tech. Renovated in 1990, it is now home to the Office of Enrollment Services, which includes Admission, Financial Aid, and the Registrar.

9. Seney Hall

Constructed in 1881, Seney Hall is the main academic and administrative building on campus. It houses classrooms as well as offices for faculty and administration, including the office of Oxford College Dean Badia Ahad.

3. Johnson Hall

Built in 1874, Johnson Hall (formerly Language Hall) is one of the oldest buildings on campus. It was renamed in October 2021 in honor of Oxford graduate Judge Horace J. Johnson, who dedicated his life to public service and was a committed supporter of the college and Emory University. Language and anthropology classes are held in its large, modern, and high-tech classrooms.

13. Candler Hall

Originally named in honor of Emory President Warren Akin Candler (1888–1898), the building has served as the college library and was previously the student center. Candler Hall is now used as multipurpose event and office space, and various campus activities take place here throughout the year.

25 & 29. Elizer and Murdy Halls

The first buildings in the East Village Residential Complex, Elizer and Murdy house 350 students. The first environmentally friendly LEED gold-certified buildings on campus, the complex also includes the Student Health Center and Counseling and Career Services.

26. Fleming Hall

The third residence hall in the East Village Residential Complex, Fleming Hall was completed in 2014 and houses more than 200 students. Designed with student input, Fleming includes a gym, media room, kitchen, third-story deck, and study spaces.

2. Humanities Hall

Built in 1875 and renovated in 2021, Humanities Hall was previously named Science Hall, History Hall, and Chemistry Hall. Today, the building contains classrooms and faculty offices.

7. Pierce Hall

Pierce Hall is a multidisciplinary academic building for the humanities, social sciences, and mathematics. The Writing Center is housed here, as well as the Math Center, for additional assistance from faculty or student tutors.

1 & 10. Few Hall and Tarbutton Performing Arts Center

Few Hall was built in 1852 to house the Few Society, a literary club. Restored and connected to the Tarbutton Performing Arts Center in 2001, it contains music and choral classrooms, rehearsal rooms, and art and gallery spaces. It includes a 131-seat auditorium where students perform in and direct theater productions, one-act plays, musicals, and concerts.

28. Jolley Residential Center

Centrally located on the Quad, Jolley Residential Center connects four residence halls, Dickey, Bonnell, Stone, and Dowman, with large common spaces, study rooms, and recreation space.

24. Dining Hall

As part of Emory's commitment to sustainability, no trays are needed here. However, you will find a wide variety of daily food choices such as vegan, organic, and locally grown options, including produce from Oxford's organic farm.

27. Haygood Hall

Completed in 1989, this residential building stands on the location of the original Haygood Hall. Housing 140 students, it's the smallest campus residence and close to the new student center and dining hall.

30. Student Center

Oxford's student center opened in 2020. A focal point for campus activity, this light-filled, contemporary building offers flexible, open space for meetings, performances, and events and areas for planning, innovation, study, and storage for campus organizations. The bookstore, cafe dining, and a digital gaming space also are located here.

8. Science Building

Completed in 2015, the building's "nucleus," a dramatic, two-story gathering space, is used for group study, learning activities, or impromptu meetings between faculty and students. There are 12 labs and flexible classrooms as well, which support Oxford's successful programs in the sciences.

6. Phi Gamma Hall

Built in 1851, Phi Gamma is Emory University's oldest academic building. It was built for one of the original literary debate societies on campus and faces its "adversary," Few Hall, across the Quad. Now restored, it's used as a meeting and conference space.

4. Library and Academic Commons

A space that accommodates the needs of 21st-century libraries and students, the LAC has flexible seating areas and technology-enriched classrooms. The library's extensive collection is stored on compact shelving, and students have online access to Emory's nearly six million print and electronic volumes and more than 400,000 electronic journals.

23. The Day Chapel

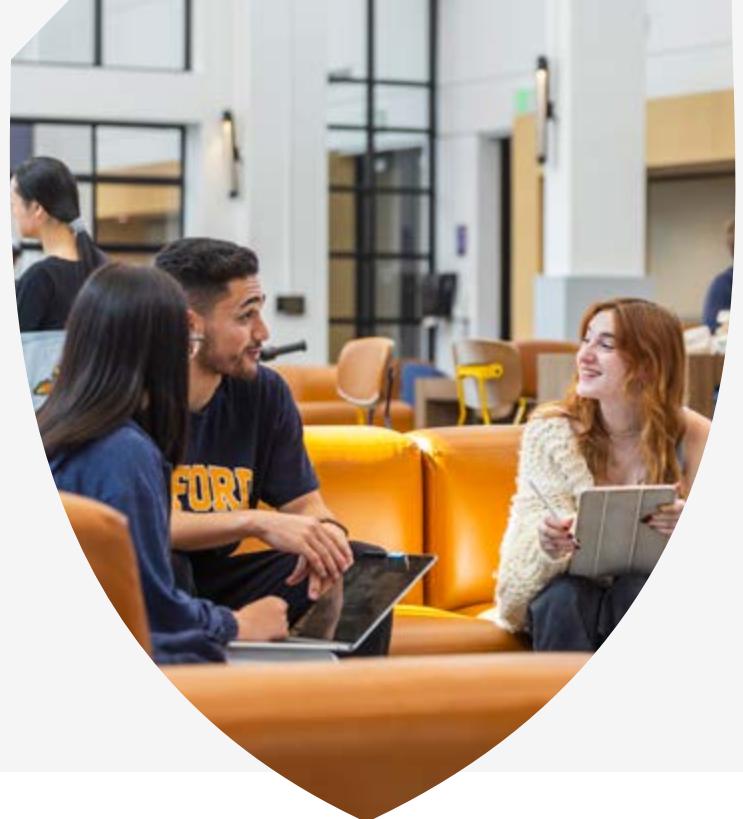

Built in 1875, the chapel adopted its name from the time of day it was typically used. Today, the chapel is used day and night by the religious and spiritual life clubs at Oxford as well as for a variety of religious and nonreligious events throughout the academic year, including the occasional wedding. Individuals also make daily use of the chapel as a space for prayer, contemplation, reflection, and rest.

11 & 22. Williams Hall and Gym

When Williams Gym opened in 1907, it was the first building in Newton County to have both running water and electricity. The hub of the Center for Healthful Living, you'll find classrooms and athletic facilities including basketball courts, a pool, a dance studio, a weight room, and an aerobics room here. Williams' indoor track is one of a handful of suspended wooden tracks remaining in the United States.
