Why "Just Posting on Facebook" Is Not a Marketing Strategy

By Anesa K. Chastain Jones - Advertising Insights with Anesa
Oklahoma's Choice Weekly

Somewhere along the way, a dangerous myth started spreading through small business marketing:

"If we post on Facebook, we're advertising."

No.

You're participating. There's a difference.

Posting on social media without a strategy is like putting a business card on a random windshield in a Walmart parking lot and hoping someone calls. Sometimes it works. Most of the time, it disappears into the void between cat videos, political arguments, and somebody's casserole recipe.

That doesn't mean digital advertising doesn't work. It absolutely does. But effective marketing requires more than random posting and wishful thinking.

It requires visibility, consistency, repetition, trust, and placement.

And that's where smart businesses separate themselves from businesses that are merely making noise.

Visibility Matters More Than Ever

Consumers today are overwhelmed with information. Every day they scroll past thousands of messages, ads, reels, headlines, notifications, and promotions.

If your business only shows up occasionally, you become forgettable.

The businesses winning right now are the ones showing up consistently across multiple platforms:

- Print
- Digital editions
- Social media
- Websites
- Email marketing
- Video content
- Sponsored posts
- Search results

The goal is not just to "be online."

The goal is to stay visible long enough for customers to remember you when they actually need you.

Because here's the truth most people forget: Most advertising does not create immediate sales. It creates future familiarity.

The Businesses That Stay Visible Stay Alive

During uncertain economic times, many businesses make the same mistake: They cut advertising first. That's usually backwards. When markets tighten, visibility becomes even more important because consumers become more selective about where they spend money.

The companies that continue marketing during slower periods are often the ones that gain market share while competitors disappear into silence.

People can't buy from businesses they forgot existed.

Print Isn't Dead. Bad Marketing Is.

Every few years someone announces the death of print advertising.

Meanwhile:

Direct mail still works.

Shopper publications still work.

Community advertising still works.

Local branding still works.

Why? Because local visibility still matters. Print creates physical presence. It sits on kitchen counters, office desks, breakroom tables, and passenger seats. It doesn't vanish in three seconds because somebody refreshed their feed. And when print is combined with digital strategy? That's where things get powerful.

QR codes, clickable digital ads, video integration, social campaigns, boosted posts, email follow-ups, and website traffic all work together to create layered marketing instead of isolated advertising. That's the future.

Not print versus digital.

Print and digital.

Repetition Builds Trust

One of the biggest misconceptions in advertising is this idea that if an ad didn't immediately generate a flood of customers, it "didn't work." That's not how branding works.

Customers buy from businesses they recognize.

Businesses they've seen repeatedly.

Businesses that appear established.

Businesses that feel familiar.

Repetition creates legitimacy. And consistency creates confidence.

The strongest brands in the world understand this. That's why they don't disappear after one commercial or one social media post. They stay in front of you constantly.

Marketing Is an Investment. Not a Lottery Ticket

Advertising is not magic.

It's momentum.

The businesses seeing the best results are usually the ones treating marketing like an ongoing system rather than a one-time event. They're building awareness week after week, month after month, year after year. That's how brands grow. Not from one viral post. Not from one boosted ad. Not from luck. From consistent visibility over time.

Final Thought

If your business is relying solely on random social media posts and hoping customers magically appear, it may be time to rethink the strategy. The businesses that thrive are the ones that stay visible, stay consistent, and stay connected to their audience everywhere customers are looking. Because in today's world, being good at what you do is important. But being remembered? That's what keeps the doors open.

TIGERS STILL CRUISIN' ROUTE 66 IN 2026!

H-O-R-S-E Tournament May 21st • 6 PM

It's probably been years (if ever) since you've made a jump shot. You might also admit that both your agility and speed are not so hot. No problem - you don't have to be an athlete in your prime, To play a friendly game of H-O-R-S-E and have a great time! It's all in fun, so come out & show everyone what you've got! Like a kid again, you will enjoy yourself ... most likely, A Lot!
