"Mrs. Kennedy is p... wardrobe and she... if you would be kind... come see her next Monday at the hospital and maybe bring along some of your sketches." (Jackie was in Georgetown Hospital convalescing after the birth of her son John.) I replied that I would be delighted.

As soon as I hung up, I realized what I had gotten myself into. I had only two days before my appointment. I had no pencils, no paper—and in Nassau, it was not altogether easy to find these things. Finally, with a sketch pad and lots of sharp pencils in hand, I went to work. Nothing, not one idea had been given an enormous chance, and my mind was blank. Relax. "Oleg," I said to myself, "think about Jackie. You know her better than any of the other designers. You know how she is. Think!"

Suddenly, it came to me. This is like a film and you have the opportunity to dress the female star. This was not so signing... motion pictures. As soon as I got to familiar ground, I calmed down and the ideas started to flow. I was thinking about the role she was going to play and my sketches started filling up the sheets. It was a daunting proposition that I began to take what I knew about Jackie, her taste, and create the outlines of a wardrobe on my return trip from Nassau to New York. When I was done, I had a list of sketches, I always had a sketchbook with me, similar to the one Jackie had designed for me. Jackie had both. She was the perfect model for very simple lines—a minimalist par excellence.

I wanted to dress her naturally, in style. I wanted to use sumptuous fabrics and simple interpretations. I called it "Jackie's collection." Of course, the designs were given consideration Jackie's life was governed by strict protocol.

When I arrived in New York, I rushed into my office with about twenty sketches to see what fabrics and colors I had

VINCE CAMUTO

WEARABLES COLLECTION

After 50 years in the shoe business, drafting off of a legacy of footwear design, Vince Camuto launched his eponymous footwear line in 2005. Vince saw a space in the market for a designer brand with a unique blend of price, trend and quality. The brand embodies European styling with detailed craftsmanship that embrace current trends, while maintaining a classic essence. Drawing on this distinct combination, the Vince Camuto brand has evolved into a globally renowned lifestyle brand encompassing key categories for women, men and kids.

He is daring and bold, loves curating his outfits to make a statement, balancing fashion, fun and an element of sophistication. He invests in quality, standout pieces with luxe details that are his “go-to” essentials for day or evening.

He's WILD AT HEART.
