CHAI-ER LEARNING

Rabbi Lenette
Herzog

We are probably all familiar with the three big fall holidays - Rosh Hashanah, Yom Kippur, and Sukkot. But as we look ahead to the next couple of months, we can also recognize another trio of Jewish holidays. In early February we celebrated Tu B'Shvat, the New Year of the Trees; in March, we'll eat hamantaschen and retell Queen Esther's triumph over the evil Haman for Purim; and several weeks after that, we will gather around our Seder tables and celebrate freedom from Egypt on Passover.

While each are special in their own right, Tu B'Shvat, Purim, and Passover don't have quite the same level of solemnity and long services as the fall holidays - and none of them involve long sermons! While the dates for each holiday were set for separate reasons, we can still find meaning and intentionality behind the rhythm for these "Spring High Holy Days" on our Jewish calendar.

Tu B'Shvat means 15th of Shevat, the holiday's date on the Hebrew calendar. The New Year of the Trees is a minor holiday in the midst of the rainy season in Israel. It was first instituted by the rabbis of the Talmud as a "birthday" for trees, so people could know when to offer first fruits to the ancient Temple. In later tradition, it became popular among Kabbalists, or Jewish mystics, and today it is a holiday for celebrating nature, especially fruit trees, and many connect it to sustainability as well. Some might think the holiday occurs in the wrong season - the trees aren't budding or blooming yet, and there aren't too many ripe fruits or nuts to eat at this season. Instead, Tu B'Shvat looks ahead to a year of fruitfulness and prosperity to come. It's especially hopeful during our cold, frigid winters - we know spring will come, and even though we may not be able to see it on first glance, nature is preparing for warmth beneath the snow and within the tree buds.

The theme of what is hidden and revealed is a main trope of our next holiday, Purim, our silliest and most joyful day of the year! Just as we wear masks and costumes, we celebrate how Queen Esther revealed her true self, her Jewish identity, to her husband King Ahasuerus, and successfully stopped the evil Haman from annihilating the Jews of ancient Persia. We celebrate Esther's resilience and Mordechai's bravery in the face of hatred, as well as their faith in the Jewish people and in God, even though God isn't explicitly mentioned in the text.

Our final holiday is Passover, the longest of the three holidays, arguably the most sacred time in our spring calendar. We gather around our Seder tables and celebrate our freedom from oppression in Egypt with special melodies and foods. Like Purim, we recognize individuals who didn't sit back and helped bring about freedom, including non-Israelites such as the daughter of Pharaoh. We hold up the matzah, the "bread of affliction," and consider how we and others can be freed from oppression today. Like Tu B'Shvat, foods on our Seder plate like the egg and green vegetables represent spring and renewal.

So what can we take from the rhythm of the spring holidays together? Each of these holidays remind us of the values of hope and renewal, balanced with perseverance and our own agency. We look ahead with optimism towards spring, acceptance of our people and freedom from all forms of oppression, but at the same time, we also recognize that it's up to us to take active roles in that desired future we share.

We also see another common theme that should be no surprise to us - the value of food! Each holiday centers around special foods, feasting, and gathering around the table together, reminding us of the value of sustenance and nourishment (physical as well as other types), as well as the particular nourishment of being connected with our Jewish family. Like so many aspects to our Jewish tradition, all the central ways of celebrating these three holidays: the Tu B'Shvat Seder, Purim's Megillah reading, spiel and carnival, as well as the Passover Seder, all happen in community.

On that note, I hope you will join Temple Beth Shalom's celebrations for the upcoming holidays! On Saturday, March 4th we'll have our Purim Spiel and Carnival. And looking ahead to April, our TBS First Night Seder will be on Wednesday, April 5th.

We hope you stay warm through these chilly months and our tradition brings us comfort, hope and inspiration.
