Does a company's mission statement mean anything?

That is a question that I did not think about much until we started Compass Senior Living. I have been involved in other companies that had "mission statements" and "values". My experience was that these were words that some in the company thought were a requirement to have as a company – but they had no actual meaning – and no Life.

When we started Compass Senior Living, we wanted a company that was founded on the belief that we are good people that will surround ourselves with good people. When we'd try and define the "type" of person we wanted to be associated with – the simplest and truest description was simply... Goodness.

So, when we were planning our new company in 2013 we knew that we wanted to have a Mission Statement that would describe us and describe those we wanted to associate ourselves with. We chose four words: Goodness, Loyalty, Faith, Fun.

Goodness – Be good, do good.

Loyalty – Be loyal to one another and have one another's back, especially in hard times.

Faith – Have faith that if you do the right things – the right things will happen.

Fun – in work, in life, in relationships...it is important to have balance and fun can be that balance.

"Guided by Goodness, Loyalty, Faith, and Fun" became our mission. This statement guides our decision-making. We ask ourselves when interviewing – Is this person someone that is good and loyal? Has the faith to do the right thing? Laugh easily and smile often?

Goodness is true north. This formed our "Compass" and in doing so, we not only have our mission statement for guidance – but we can also ask what our true north direction is. Is it goodness?

Starting the Conversation

Let's look Alzheimer's in the eye this year

Caring is what makes us human

Over the last few months our Director of Education and Innovation, Jean Garboden, and I have traveled to several Compass Senior Living communities to conduct training we call Caring is What Makes Us Human: Empathetic communication with those who have dementia. It has evolved into a powerful and engaging series of stories that reflect the more than 10 years we've been working to try to understand dementia and find a better way to care for those who have it. Our employees are required to attend. It's those that are not required to attend that inspire me.

For several of the trainings elders and families have joined us. Recently, I was inspired looking out at the elders' faces that were engaged in the conversation—unafraid of what they'd learn. They aren't afraid of knowing what Alzheimer's or other dementias can do. And, with their presence, they are facing it head-on. Elders may see this daily amongst their peers and wonder, "am I next"? And yet, they were the ones most interested in learning what it means, how to understand, and how they can care for others.

Engaging in the conversation

These elders inspire me because they are engaging in the conversation that most are too afraid to have. They are arming themselves with the knowledge that will help to eliminate fear. They are building understanding that those with dementia are still "in there" and they are whole human beings to be loved-- not feared. They are showing us that age, impairments, and change are to be understood and accepted. The elders that choose to engage are ambassadors powerfully making a better elderhood future for the rest of us.

Disrupt the fear about Alzheimer's

Like cancer, the movement to find a cure for Alzheimer's is growing because most of us know, or have known, someone with Alzheimer's or another dementia. If you haven't yet, you will. By learning about dementia and how we can communicate with those who have it, you join the movement to change language around "locked units". They are not prisoners to be locked away. They are mothers, fathers, brothers, sisters, daughters, sons, aunts, and uncles. They simply need us to look them in the eye, sing to them, dance with them, and know they still desire to be heard and understood.

Resolve to learn more

As this new year starts please make a resolution that will make real change with one simple act. Resolve to learn more, participate in conversations, and try to understand Alzheimer's and other dementias. Follow in these elders' footsteps and learn what you can do to help just one individual. After all, caring is what makes us human.

Inspired Aging. . .

It annoys me when people say, ‘Even if you’re old, you can be young at heart!’ Hiding inside this well-meaning phrase is a deep cultural and stereotypical assumption that old is bad and young is good. What’s wrong with being old at heart, I’d like to know? Wouldn’t you like to be loved by people whose hearts have practiced loving for a long time?

I travel around the United States and visit with elders who are 80, 90 and 100+ years old. I am inspired and amazed, that for many of them, no matter what their physical or cognitive challenges, the one thing they all have in common is that they are curious, interesting, and passionate life-long learners.

People who perceive themselves as lifelong learners often are “superagers,” remaining vital and cognitively resilient through very old age.

Between 1900 and 2000, average life expectancy increased by nearly 30 years in the United States and most other developed countries of the world. For the first time in history, most people now being born can expect to live seven, eight, nine, or more decades. This changes not only the trajectory of individual lives but also the shape of societies. Adults 60 and older are now the fastest-growing segment of our population.

This increase in longevity gives rise to new important questions:

- What do we want to do with an extra 30 years?
- How should we, as individuals and as a society, shape the direction and purpose of our longer lives?
- Can we design a path to our future that improves the well-being and opportunities of people at all ages?
- Should we be creating new social and business policies that will foster these opportunities?
- How do we prepare young people for longer lives—and can these questions be answered in ways that would be beneficial for all generations?
- How do I personally reimagine a purposeful lifestyle for myself?

We have added 30 years to our lives, not just for the lucky few but for the majority of people in the developed world. The truth is that we have created a new stage of life called Elderhood - but have not yet envisioned its purpose, meaning, and opportunities.

What does this new stage of life mean?

- Psychologists Erik and Joan Erikson viewed later life as a time when the impulse to give back to society becomes an urgent need.
- Carl Jung, an early psychologist with interest in the challenges of the second half of life, saw older age as a fertile period of spiritual growth and individuation.
- Betty Friedan, a social psychologist, researched aging late in her life and suggested that there is a “fountain of age,” a period of renewal, growth, and experimentation based on a new freedom.
- Dr. Bill Thomas, a geriatrician, is at the forefront of a strong nationwide movement to reframe life after adulthood, which is Elderhood, as an exciting stage of human growth and development. In his book Second Wind, he explores the dreams and disappointments, the struggles and triumphs of a generation of 78 million people who once said they would never grow old and never trust anyone over thirty.

Having created a new stage of life, Elderhood - the next step is to make these extra 30 years meaningful! For some of us it may be:

- Choosing a healthy lifestyle so that the extra 30 years of life can be vibrant.
- Volunteering or working in jobs to make the world a better place; creating a legacy through service, mentoring and activism to benefit future generations.
- Embracing new paradigms for aging to realize our potential. Reinventing our life, and doing something we have always dreamed about but never had the opportunity to do.
- Assuming the Elder teaching role as the conduit to connect the generations to restore the broken connections in our culture. Even the frailest elder has something to teach us, if we, as students, recognize the elder wisdom as an opportunity to actualize their purpose and legacy.

The truth is, we don't yet know what Elderhood, this new stage of life, can be, but the first step is to change the lens through which we view aging and challenge our stereotypical assumptions.

No matter what our age or frailty or ability, we are always fully capable human beings. Until our last breath, we are evolving, and are in a period of renewal, growth, and experimentation.

Elderhood is a Blessing

It is a blessing to experience elderhood. As I complete the last year of my sixth decade, I hope I live long enough to experience the joy of this stage of life first hand.

Let's have some fun. I will share with you some humorous wisdom from some older people who make us laugh and take life lightly.

George Carlin said, "So far, this is the oldest I've been."

Every day is a gift.

Yogi Berra said, "You've got to be very careful if you don't know where you're going because you might not get there."

World view changes.

Charles Barkley said, "The older I get, the faster I was."

Just outright clever.

Erma Bombeck said, "The only reason I would take up jogging is so that I could hear heavy breathing again."

George Carlin said, "I was looking in the mirror the other day and I realized I haven't changed much since I was in my twenties. The only difference is I look a whole lot older now."

Forever young

Novelist Terry Pritchett said, "Inside every older person is a younger person wondering what happened."

Probably my favorite quotes

George Burns' "I don't believe in dying. It's been done. I'm working on a new exit. Besides, I can't die now-I'm booked."

My challenge to you is to celebrate where you are today. Whatever your age, destiny has brought you to it. Celebrate your life right where you are! It is alright to find humor in the aging process. In my life, as my hair continues to turn gray I believe I have earned the right to celebrate each one of them.
