Koh Jum

The island Koh Jum, the northern part of the island is also called Koh Pu, is located on the West Coast of Thailand and is an absolute travel highlight. Nevertheless, most travelers and backpackers skip this little paradise on their bucket list. What a pity, Koh Jum is a real insider tip among campers and it's totally worth a visit. The beaches are lovely and beautiful, the people incredibly warm-hearted and welcoming. In addition, prices are still cheap.

One thing is for sure, a trip to Koh Jum is definitely worth it. The mix of nature, lovely people and beautiful beaches will captivate you and not let go so quickly.

Pa Pong Piang

The rolling green hills of the north are an unexpected delight. Set aside time to visit rice fields in Thailand, it's gorgeous! Far from the beaches of the south, this is a land of lush landscape and friendly people where life moves at a slower pace and you can really kick back and relax.

One of the best things to do in the north is to head for some traditional rice terraces. This in Thailand of your imagination, endless green rows of terraced fields stretching as far as the eye can see, dotted with wooden houses and dusted with clouds. We've helped you out with the hows and whos of a trip to these parts of the north.

OK, so a trip to these northern Thai rice terraces isn't exactly an adrenaline ride, but that's not what you're there for anyway! Visitors tend to either come for the day or stay for one night, and the main way to pass the time is a stroll through the fields soaking up the views and taking a few epic photos. If the sun comes out then you're in luck, the fields are such a bright green color that they glow at most. Backscatters in the sunshine, it's super cool!

Massive glaciers, staggering with wild animals: We

Mount Everest, Nepal
Mount Everest is the highest mountain in the world, with its peak measuring 29,029 feet above sea level. But don't worry, you don't have to make it to the summit to count as visiting, as long as you have seen Mount Everest in the Himalayas you can count as having visited it.

Weyto Lake, Canada
It's hard to believe that Peyto Lake's turquoise water isn't actually a filter but it is real! The colour comes from glacial rock flour, which is tiny rock particles that are created through glacial erosion. They are deposited into the water and create this pristine lake with its turquoise hue.

Uluru (Ayer's Rock), Australia
Uluru, also known as Ayer's Rock, is located in Australia's Northern Territory, it's home to the Anangu Aboriginal people. The giant sandstone rock has a circumference of about 5.8 miles and is a popular attraction for tourists. However, please note that the Anangu Aboriginal people have asked tourists not to climb the rock as it holds cultural significance. So far there have been 35 deaths of tourists who did not heed this request.

Summary
Our world is full of incredible natural wonders to see and you'll likely find something remarkable in every country you visit. This article helped show you just a selection of some of the best that we'd recommend, but there are plenty more out there.

Elephant Nature Park

Elephant Nature Park is one of the best kind conservation projects in Thailand. Set on the forest near Chiang Mai, in Thailand's north, it's founded by award-winning conservationist in 1986. More than 75 elephants roam free here a heart-breaking story: many have been saved in camps that exploit elephants for tourism or for other abusive situations.

The refuge is also home to a rugged menagerie of cats, dogs, horses, warthogs, water buffalo and otters. There are a few different ways to visit: Elephant Nat with both single day or overnight stays available. We help prepare fruit and vegetables for the elephants, for the other animals, or you can stay overnight to get more time with these gorgeous creatures also available and must be booked well in advance.
