Advertising Is Changing Across Oklahoma

By Anesa K. Chastain Jones - Advertising Insights with Anesa Oklahoma's Choice Weekly

Across Oklahoma, the local media landscape continues to evolve.

Many community newspapers that once operated full-time offices and printed multiple editions each week are adapting to changing consumer habits, rising costs, and the growing demand for digital content. Some publications have reduced office hours, while others have scaled back print schedules or shifted portions of their content online.

For businesses, these changes present both challenges and opportunities. The way consumers access information today is dramatically different than it was even a decade ago. While traditional advertising still plays an important role, customers now discover businesses through a variety of channels including websites, social media, mobile devices, digital publications, online searches, email marketing, and video content. As a result, businesses are finding that a single advertising platform is rarely enough to consistently reach potential customers.

According to industry studies, consumers often need multiple interactions with a business before making a purchasing decision. A customer may first discover a company through social media, later visit its website, see an advertisement in a digital publication, and ultimately make contact after seeing the business repeatedly over time.

This shift has changed the way successful companies approach advertising. Instead of relying on one form of media, many businesses are focusing on visibility across multiple platforms. The goal is no longer simply to place an ad. The goal is to remain visible wherever potential customers spend their time.

At Oklahoma's Choice Weekly, that philosophy has driven growth and innovation in recent years.

In addition to its weekly digital edition, Oklahoma's Choice Weekly offers website advertising, social media promotion, blog content, mobile app visibility, and interactive advertising experiences designed to help businesses connect with consumers in meaningful ways. Advertisers can even incorporate video directly into their advertisements, creating a more engaging experience for readers.

The publication's mobile app provides another avenue for businesses to remain accessible to consumers, while its digital edition allows advertisers to reach readers regardless of geographic location.

As consumer behavior continues to evolve, businesses that adapt alongside those changes are often the ones best positioned for long-term success. The reality is that advertising is no longer about choosing between print and digital. It is about creating a consistent presence across the platforms where customers spend their time.

Media may be changing, but the need for businesses to connect with customers remains as important as ever.

For businesses looking to grow, the question is not whether advertising has changed. The question is whether their advertising strategy is evolving with it.

fill station it will save you from the "help me" kids and let them be independent. I might suggest having a make your own snack station, our go to is smores. Anything that simple, is always a win.

I like to make sure I have a schedule, or good guess for timing so everything can run smooth. I know with fireworks you really have no control of the timing there, but if you know how long the wait is you can keep the kids busy. Adults always just chit-chat and that's enough entertainment for them. Thankfully.

As far as table and serving. I love real dishes, but when it comes to outside parties, I buy paper and plastic, especially since we know the 4th will be a late-late night for everyone. So, throw away, really is the best way to be kind to yourself. Make sure you also keep everyone hydrated and lots of shade; Oklahoma heat is already heating up so lots of water and electrolytes to keep everyone going. No one wants to be dehydrated or have heat exhaustion. (A gentle reminder: just because it's in the evening or dark doesn't mean a person can't get dehydrated or experience heat exhaustion.)

Here's a list of dehydration symptoms to be on the lookout for.

Thirst: Your body's natural signal that it needs water.

Urine Color: Dark yellow or amber-colored pee.

Dryness: Dry or sticky mouth, chapped lips, and dry eyes.

Decreased Output: Urinating less frequently than usual.

Physical Discomfort: Mild headaches, muscle

cramps, or general fatigue

Warning Signs of Heat Exhaustion

Watch out for the following symptoms, which typically appear quickly:

Skin: Heavy sweating, pale, cool, or clammy skin

Nervous System: Dizziness, lightheadedness, or brief fainting

Digestive: Nausea, vomiting, or loss of appetite

Physical: Weakness, fatigue, headache, or muscle cramps in the legs, arms, or stomach

Vitals: Fast, weak pulse and rapid or shallow breathing

Other: Intense thirst or decreased urine output

Immediate First Aid

If you or someone else exhibits these symptoms, take rapid action to prevent it from progressing into heat stroke:

Move to a cooler place: Get to an air-conditioned area or seek deep shade.

Cool the body: Loosen or remove unnecessary clothing. Apply cool, wet cloths to the skin, or take a cool shower.

Hydrate: Sip cold water, clear broth, or an electrolyte-rich sports drink. Avoid drinks with alcohol or caffeine.

Rest: Lie down and elevate your feet slightly.

Most importantly, have a good time! The world is crazy right now, and it feels like it is getting crazier each day. We all deserve to let our hair down. Have some good ol fun and celebrate our America!

Happy Cleaning

Happy June! Friends, normally around this time I am talking about camping and getting ready to relax. Well not this year! America is having a big birthday! I know we don't ask ladies their age, but this is the exception. She is turning 250 years old! She doesn't look like a day over 100! There are going to be tons of parties and community activities, so much fun to be had! I can't wait! If you don't normally host or have plans on the 4th, may I suggest, looking to see if your community needs volunteers for their shindigs. Many hands make light work for events. Now if you are hosting a party, you need to get a jump on it. It will be here before you know it. Here are my favorite tips and tricks for an outdoor party.

First, I like to plan enough things to keep kids and husbands busy. Planting the husband on the grill generally works. Depending on the age range of the kids, glow sticks, bubbles, chalk, water guns, sprinklers, equal fun and busy for kids. If you do bubbles or water toys you really want to make a re-

Small Towns. Big Spirit.

As America approaches 250 years of independence, we celebrate the heart of our nation, our people, our communities, and the values that have carried us far.

ROOTED IN TRADITION

From county fairs and Friday night lights to family dinners and church on Sunday, our traditions are what keep us strong and connected.

BUILT ON COMMUNITY

Small towns are more than just places on a map. They're where neighbors show up, businesses support each other, and communities grow together.

DRIVEN BY HARD WORK

From the fields to the shop, the office to the open road, we work, we build, and we never stop believing in a better tomorrow.

Here's to the next 250 years of freedom, Opportunity, and the American spirit!

Proud to be American. Proud to be Oklahoman

Did You Know?

As America prepares to celebrate its 250th anniversary, many people may wonder where the country's name came from. According to the Library of Congress, America was named after Italian explorer Amerigo Vespucci, who believed the lands explored by Christopher Columbus were part of a separate continent rather than Asia. In 1507, German mapmaker Martin Waldseemüller created one of the first maps identifying the region as "America," using a Latinized version of Vespucci's first name. Today, that historic map is often referred to as "America's Birth Certificate."
