January on Theuniskraal

At Theuniskraal Wines, January isn't just the start of the year—it's one of the most exciting and crucial times of the year. As the days stretch longer and the summer heat sets in, the vineyard buzzes with activity as the team prepares for the harvest and carefully parses the grapes to ensure the best wine is made. Let's take a closer look at what happens during this busy month in the vineyard and how these early steps shape the future of Theuniskraal's award-winning wines.

January marks the beginning of harvest season in many wine-growing regions, and Theuniskraal is no exception. The grapes are ripening, and this is when the team begins carefully monitoring the vines. Harvesting isn't just about picking the fruit—it's a delicate process that requires a keen understanding of when each grape variety has reached its peak ripeness.

Once the grapes are harvested, they don't just go straight to the press. Parsing is the careful sorting and selection of the grapes to ensure that only the best, healthiest fruit makes it into the fermentation process. Grapes that are overripe, underripe, or damaged are removed to guarantee that the final wine will be of the highest quality.

As the grapes are harvested, parsed, and prepped for fermentation, there's an undeniable sense of excitement about the future. The hard work put in during January will pay off in the months ahead when the wines begin to take shape.

While the harvest and parsing are the highlights of January, there's still plenty of ongoing work in the vineyard and around the farm. The summer weather means the vines are growing rapidly, the other fruits need harvesting and regular monitoring is needed to keep them healthy. The team checks for any signs of disease or pests and ensures that the vines and orchards are well-pruned and supported as they continue to grow.
