Ways We Wonder.

Could your idea survive on

Mute?

No words. No copy. No mercy. If the idea falls apart without language, it might not be ready yet. What's left when you take the words away?

What if you crossed the streams?

The image is an abstract, close-up photograph of a textured surface, likely the cover or endpaper of an old book. The texture is grainy and uneven, with a prominent vertical crease or fold running down the center. The color palette is dark and moody, featuring deep blues, blacks, and greys, with a bright, glowing light source at the top right corner that creates a strong highlight and casts a shadow. The overall atmosphere is mysterious and aged.

The guidelines are there for a reason...until an ancient cosmic entity shows up on the roof of your high rise. What rules would you break when all bets are off?

What if you pulled the load-bearing

Jenga block?

Every tower has one. The block everything else depends on. What happens when you remove it – on purpose? Sometimes what rushes in to fill the void is more interesting than what was standing there before.

Can you add a big

Red Button?

You know, the one you're never supposed to press, which is exactly what makes you so desperate to press it? How can you trigger that same ancient instinct that drives humanity to just...see what happens.
