Get The Right Footwear

The choice of safety footwear depends on the type of occupational risk. As well as footwear, additional safety features may be required such as penetration resistance, electrical resistance. This shows the areas of relevant health and safety protection.

European Standards Footwear Classification

The principal classification of footwear is based on the level of protection offered by the footwear. The table below explains the standards in detail:

EN ISO 20345

Safety Footwear: Highest protection. Toecaps tested to 200 joules for S classification.

SB	Basic safety protection with 200J toe cap.	S4	200 Joule toe cap with antistatic properties, energy absorption, and full waterproof construction (rubber/polymer).
S1	200 Joule toe cap with antistatic properties and energy absorption in the heel.	S5	S4 features plus penetration resistance for enhanced safety.
S1P	All S1 features plus penetration-resistant insert (steel/composite) and added protection.	S6	Waterproof design with antistatic properties and energy absorption for comfort.
S2	S1 features with water resistance (tested up to 60 minutes).	S7	Higher protection with 300 Joule toe cap, antistatic properties, and energy absorption.
S3	S2 features plus penetration resistance for added underfoot protection.

Additional Protection Features

- » Toe cap protection in either steel or composite
- » Heat resistant outsole up to 300°C
- » Temperature resistance of -20°C
- » Waterproof
- » Anti Static Safe
- » Oil Resistant

Depending on the test conditions chosen, footwear may include the additional features listed, indicated by the following tags: SRA, SRB, SRC (tested on footwear).

Footwear products are tested and certified as a whole, not just individual components. The markings showcase the multiple layers of protection as indicated.

 Anti Static Safe	 Water resistance
 Oil Resistant	 Cleated outsole

Shoe Size Conversion Table This table is for guidance only
