About the Book

Ukraine, 1941. Bella Kaplan could never please her strict mother, Nina. Stubborn and wild, she was the opposite of her perfect sister Sofia. When the Nazis force her family to flee, life becomes even harder. Returning after the war to a ruined home, they must rebuild from scratch.

Living in poverty and constantly berated by her mother, Bella learns not to expect much from life. But deep down, she knows she deserves better. She deserves to be loved.

Fed up with following Nina's orders, Bella leaves everything behind to build her own life. She enrolls in university and falls for Anatoly, a handsome young man her mother would never approve of because he isn't Jewish. But when Bella thinks she finally has it all, her life begins to unravel. Between an alcoholic husband and a resentful son, she cannot escape her mother's scathing judgment.
