SYNOPSIS

Coupled with the unending Ukraine War and the one-sided Gaza War, US President Donald Trump's 'Tariff War' on nations has sought to re-write geo-political, geo-economic and geo-strategic realities.

India benefited from the continued purchase of 'cheap' Russian oil when the US and the rest of the West imposed every kind of economic and political sanctions on Moscow. India has not acted upon American threats under two Presidents and European and Australia-Japanese advice for India to stop the import of Russian oil. For once, India has openly defied the West, unlike in the past, where New Delhi did all the same but in studied, stoic silence, without ruffling too many international feathers.

Add to this, India's emerging economic power, and it has consequences for the rest of the world in terms of geo-politics and geo-strategy. Hence, when Prime Minister Narendra Modi chose to attend the Shanghai Cooperation Organisation (SCO) Summit in China, and also use the occasion to meet with President Xi Jinping after seven years, it did cause many eyebrows to raise, especially in the US and the rest of the West. So did the three-some meeting of the two with Russian President Vladimir Putin on the sidelines of SCO Summit.

Where does all this lead to? Is India, despite claiming to be the fourth, if not the third largest global power, playing the Global Peter against an emerging Paul, as Indian strategic community had often accused nations like Sri Lanka, Maldives and other smaller neighbours, in the case of their own India / China ties?

SYNOPSIS (CONTD....)

Having failed to insulate ourselves against the possibilities that Trump 2.0 promised, is it wise for India to be seen as swinging to the other end of the strategic spectrum to the other, between the US and China, to be precise, even as continuing to maintain traditional relations with Russia. Then, there are India's friends in Europe, like France, and also nations like Japan, apart from the ASEAN bloc, whatever the emerging equations with the EU.

In the evolving situation, India continues to push its tentative leadership of the Global South, where China used to be a competitor, but after the Prime Minister's recent visit, is Beijing also a compatriot? To begin at the beginning even as India normalises ties with China, it needs a comfort zone, where Beijing does not continue to promote and project Pakistan, where it has got an old/new competition in the US.

With India's southern Ocean frontier increasing in politico-strategic importance, China, for instance, should actually be creating a CBM, confidence-building measure, vis a vis India's Ocean neighbours, where Beijing's actions have been provocative over the past two-plus decades.

In context, what all should India be looking for, especially with its expanding global reach and out-reach, where the Gulf region, Africa and South America too cannot be left out as inconsequential.

PROFILE

Mr M K Narayanan

*Former Governor of West Bengal &
Former, National Security Advisor*

Mayankodu Kelath Narayanan (born 10 March 1934) is a former Indian Police Service officer. He was the National Security Adviser of India from 2005 to 2010, assuming the role after the demise of his predecessor, Jyotindra Nath Dixit, in January 2005. Subsequently, he served as 19th Governor of West Bengal from 2010 to 2014. The Government of India awarded him the civilian honour of Padma Shri in 1992.

M. K. Narayanan joined the Indian Police Service in 1955 and passed out with the highest marks. After a brief stint as a Sub-Divisional Police Officer in the erstwhile State of Madras, he went on deputation to the Intelligence Bureau in February 1959. The rest of his service career was spent under the Government of India, mainly in the Intelligence Bureau, in which he dealt with a whole range of issues concerning internal and national security.

He headed the Intelligence Bureau (IB) from 1987 to 1990, before heading the Joint Intelligence Committee for a year. He became Chief (a four-star rank, equivalent to an Army general) of the IB again in 1991, before retiring in 1992. He was then appointed Special Adviser (a non-Civil Service appointment) for Internal Security to the Prime Minister of India beginning in May 2004. He was Indian National Security Adviser with the rank of Minister of State from 2005 to 2010. He played a significant role in the negotiation of the Indo-US Civil Nuclear Agreement. He took over as Governor of West Bengal from Gopalkrishna Gandhi, who had a few disagreements with the then CPI(M)-ruled state on critical issues like violence in Nandigram and Singur.
