The Power of Giving

As a first-generation college student, James Hickey '19 took full advantage of the opportunity provided by his Pace scholarship. James excelled academically during his time at Pace and has quickly built a thriving post-graduate career in the finance industry. Recently, James made the incredibly inspiring decision to establish a scholarship in memory of his mother and father, who he lost far too young. Deeply aware of the transformative impact a Pace education can have, James has chosen to pay it forward to the next generation of students.

Dante Hurr '24

Computer Science

Seidenberg School of Computer Science and Information Systems

Raised by a single mother in Southeast Washington, D.C., Dante worked full-time while attending high school to help his family pay the bills. Dante's mother often emphasized to him the importance of education, and it was always Dante's intention to attend college and earn a degree. However, unable to take time off work after graduating high school early, Dante lacked the resources to take the necessary standardized tests and apply to schools.

Thanks to a combination of hard work and the scholarship support he received from Pace, Dante was able to realize his commitment to continuing his education. Beginning school as a first-generation college student in the midst of the COVID-19 pandemic presented challenges. Still, with help from professors and advisors, Dante's unwavering spirit of dedication and perseverance guided him through.

Over the past four years, Dante has juggled work and school in pursuit of a degree in Computer Science, excelling academically and inspiring those close to him. Now, he looks to pursue an advanced degree as he begins his career in web application and development.

Delilah Doyle '24

Early Childhood Education
School of Education

Delilah has had a passion for athletic competition since she was a young girl. However, her sporting career has not been without its challenges. Throughout her upbringing, beginning at age five, Delilah has undergone three separate open-heart surgeries.

Despite the setbacks that go along with being a heart patient, Delilah has remained determined to continue her athletic pursuits and compete alongside her teammates throughout high school and college. Since joining the Women's Lacrosse team as a freshman at Pace, Delilah has become a starter and a team captain.

As a student-athlete, Delilah has excelled both on and off the field. While at Pace, Delilah has flourished as a student, made lasting bonds with her coaches and teammates, and helped lead the Lady Setters to the Women's Lacrosse Division II National Championship in 2023. "I'm a different person than I was when I first came to Pace," says Delilah. "I've had the opportunity to grow into the best version of myself here. I know I'm exactly where I'm supposed to be. That's an incredible feeling."
