

SOCIAL WORK

Social Work

Social workers help empower individuals, especially those who are vulnerable, oppressed, and living in poverty. The main goal of social work is to improve human well-being and help meet the basic needs of all people.

Social workers are qualified professionals with education, training, and experience. The individual must earn a bachelor, master's, or doctoral degree from an accredited social work program to be called a social worker. CWC program provides excellent foundational training, and direct skills to become a social worker.

Through the CWC program the students will learn skills to prepare for entry-level social work practice or continue towards a bachelor's degree of social work.
