We Already Have Social Media (And Other Dangerous Marketing Assumptions)

By Anesa K. Chastain Jones - Advertising Insights with Anesa
Oklahoma's Choice Weekly

9 Hear this a lot lately: "We already post on Facebook." "We already have Instagram." "We're doing fine online." Okay. But let me ask you something. Is social media working for you...or are you just existing on it? Because those are two very different things.

Posting Is Not Advertising

Having a social media page is not a marketing strategy. It's a communication tool. Social media is great for:

- Engaging customers you already have.
- Sharing updates.
- Showing personality.
- Staying top of mind, sometimes.

But it is not guaranteed visibility. When you post on social media, you are at the mercy of:

- Algorithms.
- Timing.
- Engagement.
- Competing content.
- Paid prioritization.

You might have 3,000 followers. But how many actually see your post? Often? A fraction. And those are mostly people who already know you.

Advertising Reaches Beyond Your Bubble

Here's the difference: Social media talks to your audience. Advertising expands your audience. If you only post on your page, you're speaking inside your own circle.

Running in the paper, whether digital edition or print, places your business in front of people who may not be following you, may not be searching for you, and may not even know you exist yet. That's growth.

Visibility You Don't Control vs. Visibility You Secure

On social media:

- Reach fluctuates.
- Posts disappear in hours.
- Content competes with memes, news, and distractions.

In the paper: Your ad is positioned intentionally. It lives in a trusted space. It is seen by readers actively consuming local content. It isn't buried under someone's vacation photos. One is reactive. The other is strategic placement.

"But We Boost Posts."

Good. Boosting means you already understand that organic reach isn't enough. So let's think bigger. Instead of boosting a post that disappears in 48 hours... What if you also place your business in a publication where:

- It sits alongside other reputable businesses.

- It reinforces credibility.
 - It builds long-term brand recall.
 - It supports the local ecosystem that supports you.
- Social media builds speed. Publication builds stature.

The Hidden Cost of Relying Only on Social Media

When businesses rely only on social media, here's what happens:

- They market to the same people repeatedly.
- They chase engagement instead of building authority.
- They become dependent on trends.
- They plateau.

And then they wonder why growth stalls.

Because exposure inside your own follower list isn't expansion. It's maintenance.

Why Running in the Paper Still Matters

Even in a digital-only season, the paper is different.

- It's curated.
- It's intentional.
- It's consumed differently than scrolling.

People don't skim a publication the same way they skim a feed. They read. They browse. They discover. Discovery is powerful. You don't grow by waiting for people to search for you. You grow by showing up where they're already looking.

The Real Question

If someone new moved to town today... Would they find you? Or would they only find the businesses that advertise beyond their own page?

Advertising Insight of the Week

Social media is part of the plan. It is not the whole plan. If you want stability, growth, and real visibility, you cannot rely on one channel, especially one you don't control. Post online. Engage your followers. But also position your business where it expands your reach, not just maintains it. Because visibility isn't about having a page. It's about being seen.
