Fridge clutter up, consume electricity, contain few products and your staff must spend time replenishing and checking them out

You can automate the charging of withdrawals with modular systems that detect the products withdrawn and automatically charge them to the room account, however they also count products withdrawn and not consumed, if put back after more than 60 seconds. This can cause embarrassing misunderstandings at the guest's check out, negatively affecting feedback

The new trend is to replace minibars with automated refreshment islands on the floor, which allow guests to find everything they need just steps from their room and pay by cash, card, or automatic account credit

With this system you can save time and electricity, and you will be able to offer your guests a greater variety of products: cold and hot drinks, snacks, ready meals, ice cream, bottles, and even accessories such as chargers, reading glasses, batteries, spare laundry kits, sunglasses, and anything else you want

With H+Contractor you can create modular islands with designs to match your furnishings and in different configurations: simple snack zones on the floors, real automated restaurants, and even multi-product shopping points, including dedicated to luxury, with jewelry, watches and other preciousness, also branded by Cartier, Sephora and Moët & Chandon
