How do I Support my Mom's Vision Loss?

Ask the Doctor

Q: As a family we are struggling with my mother's vision loss due to macular degeneration. She is doing less and less and blames her vision. She also seems to be becoming more and more depressed. We have tried a lot of things with minimal to no success. At this point my siblings and I are lost as to how to help her. What can we do?

A: First, she needs a thorough low-vision evaluation to determine how much vision she actually has. Most people tend to focus on what they can't see rather than what they can. The next step is to determine the proper low-vision devices, which will give her a foundation to reintroduce activity with other supports that will lift her spirits up. Hope through action is always the best healing.

Three steps you can take in the meantime include:

- Make sure she is using light that is specifically designed for people with reduced vision. Ottlite is a great resource, specifically: <https://ottlite.com/collections/low-vision>
- See your local library or Reader's Digest for books to read that are in large print
- Make sure she has postural support (People with reduced vision need to hold things more closely to see them, using lap desks can make this easier.)

It is best if a third party delivers the prognosis and what is necessary to reclaim her life. Often when I see patients who have hit the point where they don't listen to their children, they are still open to hearing what I, as the doctor, have to say because I present real solutions that will help.

87 Years of Quality Products, Superior Service

The Hagopian difference redefines rug shopping in Novi

By Kelsi Klein

In a world where online shopping has dominated the home décor market, Hagopian's spacious and substantial retail showroom in Novi gives customers the ability to see, touch and experience their rugs in person before bringing them home.

While the Hagopian family business dates back to the 1940s, the 18,000-square-foot showroom in Novi was built in 1998 and was recognized by the Oriental Rug Retailers Association, helping the company earn the prestigious National Oriental Rug Retailer of the Year award that year.

Over the decades, Hagopian World of Rugs and Hagopian Cleaning Services have built a reputation throughout Michigan with a focus on honesty, integrity and quality, and their Novi showroom highlights the company's commitment to top-notch customer service.

Although Hagopian is recognized for its wide range of cleaning and repair services, the company is home to one of the largest in-stock rug collections in Michigan, featuring a wide range of styles fit for every home and design preference.

"One of the things we take a lot of pride in is how many large rugs we have in-stock in our store, ready for customers to see and touch," said owner and president Edmond Hagopian.

What sets the store apart from others is its Free In-Home Trial (FIT) program.

Hagopian explained that with FIT, the store allows customers to take rugs home and see how they look and feel in their own spaces, just like test driving a car.

"If you're looking for the right rug, it's a really good idea to take a couple rugs home and try them first because the lighting in your home is going to be different than in our store," Hagopian said.

The FIT program gives customers the ability to visualize colors, styles and textures in their own homes, giving them everything they need to ensure a confident purchase.

"We hear from people all the time who end up frustrated after ordering a rug and have to return it because it looks totally different than it did on a computer screen, so we know how important it is for customers to try them in their homes," Hagopian said.

Rather than competing with other companies by offering the cheapest prices, Hagopian focuses on long-term satisfaction where quality meets affordability.

With room-sized rugs starting under $1,000, Hagopian sells premium brands with attainable pricing.

"We don't want people to be disappointed two or three years down the road because they bought something of inferior quality," Hagopian said.

Being in both the retail and cleaning businesses, Hagopian said it's likely that they'll see the same rugs several times throughout the course of its lifetime, and quality makes a huge difference in how long rugs last.

Hagopian offers price matching as well as made-to-order rugs cut to fit customers' specific dimensions, a service they've offered for more than 15 years.

Beyond rugs, Hagopian offers an extensive collection of premium flooring, from carpet to hardwood to luxury vinyl plank.

Competitive prices, the highest quality products available and superior customer service backed by 87 years of experience make Hagopian World of Rugs a one-stop shop for all things flooring.

For more information or to learn more about everything Hagopian has to offer, visit www.HagopianRugs.com or call the Novi showroom at (248) 449-7847.

What if your glow, texture, and confidence shared the same foundation?

Three of today's most requested aesthetic treatments share a powerful truth:
your skin performs best when your body is supported from within.

Not seeing the results from microneedling? It may be your hormones.

Microneedling activates your skin's natural repair process — but collagen production, hydration, and recovery are deeply tied to hormonal balance. Bio-identical hormone replacement therapy (BHRT) may help optimize your internal environment, supporting skin resilience and allowing your results to fully take hold.

Not seeing refreshed skin after BroadBand Light? It may be your hormones.

BBL targets visible sun damage and uneven pigmentation brilliantly. Yet true skin vitality is also connected to estrogen, testosterone, progesterone, sleep, and overall wellness. BHRT works in harmony with aesthetic treatments — supporting elasticity, radiance, and skin quality from within so the results you see are fully realized.

Love facials, but wish the results lasted longer? Hormones may be your answer!

Facials refresh, hydrate, and brighten the skin's surface. Combined with BHRT, your treatment plan can address both external appearance and internal balance — supporting smoother texture, deeper hydration, and a more vibrant, lasting glow over time.

*Where aesthetics meets wellness —
from the inside out*

How stress ages your body – and small habits that can help.

Dr. Kenneth Smythe, Primary Care Physician at Henry Ford Medical Center – Beck Road

Avoiding stress can feel nearly impossible. Reading or listening to the news inevitably leads to some feelings of stress over things happening globally, nationally or locally. You likely also have some stressors – such as health or finances – that hit closer to home. And then there are the seemingly endless everyday stresses of work, school schedules, cooking and other household chores. Stress affects so many aspects of our lives as well as our health. It can even make our bodies seem older than they really are.

What is biological age?

You might not realize it, but you actually have two different ages. First, there's your chronological age. That's the one you can count by the number of birthday candles you blow out each year.

Then there's your biological age (sometimes called your functional age). That's a measure of how old your body is on a cellular level. Your biological age reflects your overall health, how well your body is aging and how well all its systems are functioning. Your chronological age and biological age don't always line up.

For example, a chronological 60-year-old could have a biological age closer to 40 if they manage stress well and practice healthy lifestyle habits. But the opposite is also true. That same 60-year-old with unhealthy habits and chronic conditions such as diabetes and heart disease could have a biological age closer to 80.

The ways stress affects your body

Contrary to popular belief, stress isn't always a bad thing. In fact, we need some stress. The stress response is your body's natural mechanism for protection. It triggers the 'fight or flight' response, which is essential for survival.

Problems arise when your body is under constant stress. The fight or flight response triggers a release of hormones such as cortisol. In small doses, cortisol helps your body handle stressful situations. But consistently high levels of cortisol can have negative impacts on your overall health. When cortisol levels remain high all the time, it can lead to inflammation throughout the body. And chronic inflammation is the culprit behind many health conditions, including heart disease, diabetes, dementia and even cancer.

Find stress management techniques that work for you

Everyone has stress. The difference in how that stress affects your health comes down to how well you handle it. Coping with stress is all about finding healthy lifestyle strategies that work for you. Stress management strategies are not a one-size-fits-all solution, and what works for one person may not work for another.

Devote even just five minutes once or twice a day to trying out some different ways to cope with stress. Stress management techniques can include:

- Working on a craft project
- Doing a five-minute yoga video
- Dancing to your favorite song
- Reading a book
- Calling a friend
- Taking a walk

Unlike your chronological age, your biological age is not set in stone, and even a small change in your lifestyle can have a big impact.

Recent Client Review

"We were planning a couple of years ago to move out of the area after we retired. ... I came across Jamey Kramer and did some deep research into his history and what I found was without a doubt the top agent in our area if not all of the State of Michigan. We hired him on the spot in our first interview due to his presented portfolio research on our property value, current market conditions, what current buyers were looking for and his confidence in the list price. ...The home sold the first day of showing above the list price along with occupancy until the move out date without any rent. ... What a relief to know we had the best all the way through closing.
