THE IRON GATE

Known for her comfortable, layered interiors and love of European antiques, Tennessee designer Rozanne Jackson brings a sense of ease and storytelling to every project. Her creative eye extends to two design shops dubbed The Iron perfect; if you love something, you'll find a place for it.

How do your two locations differ?

The Nashville showroom is trade-driven, with larger pieces from brands like Lee Industries and Verellen. It also doubles as my design studio, where I share space with my husband, architect Glen Oxford. Franklin is more retail-focused, with accessories, antique mirrors and chandeliers.

And the latest arrivals?

We're thrilled about our hand-painted paper lights by Parisian artist Nathanaëlle Lobjoy. We also have handblown Sempre glassware from Poland and taper candles by Ester & Erik in Denmark. Every summer, we stock farm-raised coral and display it like an underwater scene. Concrete candles by Mon Dada, which burn forever, are also available at both stores.

Gate—one in Franklin, the other in Nashville—where her sourcing talents shine. Here, Jackson shares personal insights and a few finds perfect for summer. theirongateonline.net

What's your personal style?

I love mixing textures, metal finishes and found objects with a sense of history. I think it's important to have pieces around you with patina. I don't design by formula. Rooms shouldn't feel too

SHOWROOM SPOTLIGHT

ADRIANA HOYOS

As Adriana Hoyos builds momentum in the luxury furniture space, the renowned Ecuadorian brand has debuted a dazzling new High Point headquarters. On the heels of its flagship opening in Coral Gables, Florida, this striking showroom in the heart of the Hamilton Wrenn Design District marks a bold step in the company's U.S. expansion. Spanning 6,500 square feet, the glamorous space boasts curated displays for all 13 of Hoyos' fashion-forward, timeless and precision-crafted collections—incorporating rich materials like leather, natural stone, metal and fine veneers. Completing the immersive experience is a dramatic new wallcovering installation by Orlean, a longtime partner to the brand, enhancing the visual impact. "This opening represents a strategic milestone for us," cofounder and interior designer Adriana Hoyos shares. "As we approach our 30th anniversary, this permanent presence in High Point strengthens our connection to the design community." Not to be missed is the newly launched Amazonika outdoor collection, while the highly anticipated Origen collection arrives in September. adrianahoyos.com
