Stories Behind the Wheel

"I got into trucking after getting laid off. I couldn't stand the thought of my wife having to work. This career lets her homeschool our kids while I provide for our family." Marcus Johnson

"I became interested in trucking back in 2011 when I saw my cousin's settlement check. He made in a week what I was making for the month. So I wanted in and never looked back. The thought of really being able to comfortably provide for family was the #1 reason I choose this career path." ~ Stan Strong

"Driving the Alaskan Highway. When I was driving west of White Horse YT, the views were unbelievable. I felt so close to God. The Kluane Mountain range was easily one of the prettiest places I have ever been. It makes you forget all your small problems to be surrounded by such vast, untouched beauty." ~ Garrett Steenblik

"I got into trucking to get my daughter and I away from a domestic violence situation and my favorite or most memorable experience out here was just the first year of my career I was just driving and homeschooling my daughter on the road. We got our independence and got to experience lots of places and things we never would have been able to if it were not for trucking. I think her favorite memory is going to trick-or-treat at a Hershey factory I was delivering to on Halloween." ~ Jess Graham
