

By Cooper Hoomans

The Jumps

It was a quiet day in Lidscombe Forest. The birds were chirping and the sun was setting. The forest had been untouched for years upon years. That wouldn't be the case soon...

Carter was a dirt bike rider who was bored of the same track over and over again. So he went searching for another.

Carter came across Lidscombe Forest, amazed at how much space there was. "This would be a great spot for a dirt bike track!" He said with glee.

Carter decided, because it was getting late that he would go home and come back another day. He put a stick in the ground to mark where he would build the track and put the directions to the forest in his phone. Carter then left.

Carter woke up early the next morning and got ready for his day. He found an axe and chainsaw, then off he went.

Carter arrived at the forest and admired it before he cut it all down. It was beautiful and wildlife was blooming, but not for long...

He then went to work on the trees. One by one he cut them all down and by the end of the day they were all gone.

"That's enough for today I'll do the rest tomorrow," he said with a sigh of relief.

He woke up once again for a long day of work but this time left with a shovel.

Carter built the first jump and was proud of how good it was

"I can't wait to finish this place!" He said excitedly.

It was dark soon but Carter decided he would wait until tomorrow so he could invite his best friend, Crighton.

The next morning Carter had a blast with Crighton! They rode their bikes all day.

That night Carter could not sleep, he felt so much guilt for cutting down a whole forest. He was regretting making the jumps and wanted to go back in time to stop himself.

Carter learnt his lesson and you should too. Trees are super important for the environment because we need them to create oxygen and limit the carbon in the atmosphere.

THE END