Handrails, wheelchairs, assistive devices, and any surface that a resident may come in contact with may cause injury, if the surface is not in good condition, free from sharp edges or other hazards or not installed properly.

Numerous and varied accident hazards exist in everyday life. Not all accidents are avoidable. The frailty of some residents increases their vulnerability to hazards in the resident environment and can result in life-threatening injuries.

It is important that all facility staff understand the facility's responsibility, as well as their own, to ensure the safest environment possible for residents.
