Key Issues and Priorities: An In-Depth Conversation with

JONATHAN

The Conservative activist

Who is Jonathan
Cagle?

On January 20, 2026, Jonathan Cagle was arrested and charged in Federal Court with cyberstalking, which carries a possible 5-year prison sentence for the simple act of exercising his right to free speech by exposing the corruption in our government.

The purpose of this flipbook is to acquaint you with Jonathan's work on behalf of We The People. Please take it seriously by listening, reading and absorbing the material, understanding that if you criticize the government on social media, this unconstitutional act could easily be carried out against you.

Is the answer to governmental tyranny to leave social media ... or is it to use social media to join Jonathan in the fight against corruption?

By the time you finish this book, you will understand why The Powers That Shouldn't Be were so desperate to silence Jonathan that they arrested him on specious and unconstitutional charges.

JONATHAN PLAYS GUITAR, PIANO AND OTHER INSTRUMENTS

Theonlymethereis ✓

@Theonlyme333 |

Judge James C. Ho, when he warned through his concurring opinion of a 4th Amendment decision, said it clearly:

"Hamstringing the government is the whole point of our Constitution."

Our founders never trusted government with the power to decide which words are allowed and which aren't.

Because once you give that power away, you never get it back.

And that's what these moments are really about.

Jonathan is being prosecuted for speech.

👉 Not violence.

👉 Not action.

👉 Speech.

We have to understand what a line like this represents. Because when you make one word illegal...one phrase illegal...one set of opinions illegal...you start a chain reaction that never stops.

Today it's one word.

Tomorrow it's ten.

Next year, it's any criticism that makes someone in power uncomfortable.

Our founders understood that.

They wrote the First Amendment first for a reason.

Because free expression...especially harsh, brash, passionate criticism of government...is the core safety valve of a free nation.

Judge Ho reminded us of that when he said:
*"If men were angels, no government would be necessary.
But because they are not, we must control the abuses of government.
Our rights are priceless."*

That warning matters right now.
Because what we're watching in this case isn't fear...it's punishment.
It's not about safety...it's about silencing.

It's about taking criticism of powerful people, powerful networks, and foreign malign influence...and rebranding it as extremism or "terroristic" when it's really just dissent.
And dissent is not a crime.

It's the birthright of every American.
Jonathan became a target not because he did violence, but because he spoke loudly, passionately, and without permission.

He criticized people who didn't want to be criticized.

He challenged narratives that some people in power preferred to keep unchallenged.

That is exactly why the First Amendment exists.

- 👉 Not for polite speech.
- 👉 Not for sanitized speech.
- 👉 Not for the approved opinions of the moment.

But for the messy, uncomfortable, abrasive speech that holds power accountable.

This case sets a precedent far bigger than one man.
Because if the government can criminalize words today, they can criminalize your words tomorrow.

If they can call one critic an extremist, they can call any critic an extremist.

If they can prosecute speech across state lines, they can reach into anyone's timeline.

This is why we must stand up.

Not just for Jonathan, but for every one of us who believes the government should never be trusted to decide which ideas are legal.

Support his fight.
Share his story.
Donate to his defense.
Because defending speech you don't like is how you protect the speech you do like.

Judge Ho warned:
"Our decisions today are not costless, but our rights are priceless."

So let's act like they are.

Let's show Jonathan he's not alone.

And let's show the government that the American people still know how to defend the First Amendment...and our sovereignty...loudly, unapologetically, and without fear.

For God, for Family, and for Country. 🇺🇸

Surveillance Laundering and the Preemptive Policing State:

A Constitutional Hazard in the Age of Machine-Assisted Lawfare

Guv. Morris, January 2026, upon the arrest of Jonathan Cagle

The most serious threats to constitutional governance rarely announce themselves in dramatic or overt ways. Instead, they emerge through incremental shifts in doctrine, enforcement practices, and technological capability that, taken together, fundamentally alter the balance between state power and individual liberty. In the United States today, one such threat arises from the convergence of machine-assisted private surveillance, malleable harassment and cyberstalking statutes, and a preemptive policing framework that has expanded steadily since the aftermath of September 11, 2001. This convergence has produced a novel constitutional hazard: a system in which speech may be suppressed without being declared false, individuals may be targeted without probable cause, and the protections of the First and Fourth Amendments may be functionally bypassed without formal repeal or judicial review.

The post-9/11 era marked a decisive shift in American law enforcement philosophy. Prior to that inflection point, the criminal justice system was largely oriented around reactive enforcement. Crimes were investigated after they occurred, evidence was gathered pursuant to warrants, and prosecutions were anchored to discrete acts that violated clearly articulated statutes. The shock of 9/11, however, reframed prevention as the paramount objective of public safety. The central question was no longer how to punish wrongdoing, but how to identify and neutralize threats before they materialized. This shift gave rise to fusion centers, expanded intelligence sharing, behavioral threat assessment models, and a broader cultural acceptance of surveillance as a necessary feature of security.

While initially justified in the context of counterterrorism, this preemptive logic did not remain confined to that domain. Over time, it migrated into domestic policing, digital communications monitoring, and non-violent offense frameworks. The concept of risk itself began to change. Rather than being inferred from concrete criminal acts, risk came to be inferred from patterns of behavior, indicators of fixation, and perceived trajectories of escalation. This transformation laid the groundwork for a system in which intent could be reconstructed retrospectively and enforcement could occur absent any underlying crime.

At the same time, technological capabilities underwent a parallel transformation. Advances in automation, data aggregation, and machine learning dramatically altered who could conduct surveillance and at what scale. Activities that once required state resources—continuous monitoring, cross-platform analysis, longitudinal tracking, and network mapping—became accessible to private actors. Wealthy individuals, well-connected organizations, and foreign-aligned entities gained the capacity to observe, record, and synthesize the speech and associations of others with a level of persistence and granularity that would have been unimaginable a generation earlier.

This development exposed a structural weakness in Fourth Amendment doctrine. The Fourth Amendment constrains government action, not private conduct. Historically, that distinction was tolerable because private surveillance was limited by practical constraints. Today, however, machine-assisted private surveillance can replicate, and in some cases exceed, the scope of state intelligence collection. When such surveillance is conducted privately and then handed off to law enforcement, the constitutional protections that would otherwise apply are never triggered. The state receives the benefit of surveillance it could not lawfully perform while disclaiming responsibility for its origin. This process may be described as surveillance laundering: constitutionally impermissible collection rendered procedurally acceptable through private provenance.

The constitutional danger does not end with the handoff. It is amplified by the availability of certain categories of statutes that are uniquely well-suited to absorb machine-generated surveillance outputs. Among these, harassment and cyberstalking laws occupy a central role. Originally enacted to address genuine threats and persistent physical stalking, these statutes were gradually expanded in the late 1990s and early 2000s to encompass electronic communications. In states such as California, New York, and Florida, early amendments broadened the concept of a “course of conduct” to include emails, online messages, and other digital interactions. Following 9/11, additional expansions occurred in jurisdictions such as Texas and Virginia, where preemptive policing logic increasingly informed statutory interpretation and enforcement priorities.

These laws share several features that make them particularly susceptible to misuse as tools of speech suppression. They often rely on subjective standards such as emotional distress, they permit intent to be inferred from patterns rather than explicit threats, and they do not require that the underlying speech be false, defamatory, or unlawful in content. Repetition itself becomes suspect. Persistence becomes evidence. Analysis becomes fixation. In effect, these statutes allow procedural framing to substitute for substantive adjudication. Rather than confronting the truth or falsity of speech, enforcement proceeds by recharacterizing the manner in which speech occurs.

“What you’re saying is not falsifiable in any way. It is simply said incorrectly”

Where have we heard this before?

This dynamic creates a direct collision with the First Amendment. The Constitution protects political speech, investigative journalism, and public-interest advocacy precisely because such speech is often persistent, adversarial, and unwelcome to those in power. The ability to ask repeated questions, to follow up on inconsistencies, and to continue investigating in the face of resistance is not an abuse of the public sphere; it is a core feature of democratic accountability. Yet under expansive cyberstalking frameworks, these same behaviors can be reframed as harassment if they generate discomfort or challenge entrenched interests.

The result is not merely the punishment of individual speakers, but the creation of a chilling effect that extends far beyond any single case. When enforcement thresholds are opaque and standards are subjective, individuals cannot reliably predict when lawful inquiry will cross into criminal exposure. This uncertainty induces self-censorship. Journalists narrow their scope. Researchers abandon lines of inquiry. Citizens disengage from oversight. The harm is systemic, not incidental.

The sociological concept of the spiral of silence further explains how this effect propagates. When people observe that certain forms of speech result in disproportionate consequences, they infer social and legal risk and adjust their behavior accordingly. Silence spreads not because ideas lack merit, but because expressing them appears dangerous. In the digital age, where machine-assisted surveillance renders persistence legible at scale, this spiral accelerates. One visible enforcement action can reshape the behavior of thousands who never come into direct contact with the law.

The constitutional stakes rise further when foreign-aligned actors are involved in the surveillance and referral process. If external interests monitor U.S. speakers, compile dossiers using machine tools, and feed synthesized narratives of risk into domestic law enforcement channels, constitutional rights are being constrained through indirect foreign influence. Even if enforcement is carried out by domestic authorities, the underlying impetus originates outside the democratic system the Constitution is meant to protect. This implicates not only civil liberties, but national sovereignty itself. Constitutional guarantees cannot be meaningfully preserved if they are circumvented through proxy actors beyond the reach of domestic accountability.

Compounding these concerns is the reality of selective enforcement. Harassment and cyberstalking statutes are not applied evenly. They tend to track political sensitivity, institutional embarrassment, and power asymmetries rather than neutral assessments of conduct. Identical behavior may be ignored in one context and criminalized in another. Such selectivity undermines equal protection principles and transforms law into an instrument of narrative control rather than impartial justice.

This asymmetry is particularly stark when contrasted with the failure to prosecute elite criminal networks. The reluctance of the U.S. Department of Justice to fully pursue well-documented, systemic crimes—most notably those surrounding Jeffrey Epstein—stands in sharp contrast to the aggressive application of procedural statutes against individual speakers engaged in public-interest discourse. When enforcement flows downward against the powerless while immunity flows upward toward the powerful, the legitimacy of the legal system itself is called into question.

What makes this moment constitutionally novel is not any single doctrine or policy, but the way multiple systems interact to evade existing safeguards. Fourth Amendment jurisprudence assumes state-initiated searches. First Amendment doctrine assumes content-based suppression. Due process assumes discrete charges tied to defined conduct. Equal protection assumes comparable enforcement. The architecture described here bypasses all of these assumptions by fragmenting responsibility. Private actors surveil. Machines synthesize. Statutes provide elastic hooks. Police act preemptively. Courts never reach the merits of speech.

The outcome is a constitutional bypass architecture in which no warrant is required, no probable cause is established, no falsity is adjudicated, and no meaningful judicial review occurs. Yet the chilling effect on speech is real, measurable, and profound. The boundaries of lawful expression are no longer set by law, but by algorithmic risk tolerance and enforcement discretion.

If left unexamined, this system will continue to expand, not through explicit repeal of constitutional protections, but through their gradual erosion. The danger lies not in a single statute or prosecution, but in the normalization of a framework that treats inquiry as threat, persistence as pathology, and speech as a risk vector. Such a framework is incompatible with constitutional governance. A society that allows it to persist may retain the language of freedom, but it will have quietly surrendered its substance.

It is important that speech remain viable for obvious reason², so it behooves all to advocate unequivocally in favor of absolute free speech when given the chance.

The Blueprint of Global Deception: A Step-by-Step Guide to the "Global Plot"

PHASE 1: POLITICAL INFILTRATION & THE BIRTH OF PRIVATE INTEL (1968–1972)

Infiltrate High-Level Political Campaigns:
Jules Kroll (IOF Unit 8200) joins RFK's campaign; Jeffrey Blattner (Mossad) serves as Chief Counsel to Teddy Kennedy.

Establish Private Intelligence Infrastructure:
Kroll founded, evolves into world's largest investigative firm, serving clients like the Vatican and investigating Bernie Madoff.

IDF Unit 8200 & Mossad Ties:
Kroll, K2 Intelligence identified as direct extensions of Israeli intelligence.

PHASE 2: THE 9/11 VULNERABILITY & EXECUTION (1993–2001)

Conduct Threat Analysis as Foreshadowing:
Port Authority hires Kroll to conduct a vulnerability study; report specifically identifies jet airliners as a threat to WTC.

Assume Control of Security Operations:
Kroll hired to run security for WTC Plaza, placing key conspirators in control of site safety.

The 2.3 Trillion Dollar "Disappearance" (Sept 10, 2001): Rumsfeld announces unaccounted funds; claimed consolidation into firms like Morgan Stanley and BlackRock.

PHASE 3: POST-9/11 FINANCIAL CONSOLIDATION

Liquidate Competitors & Consolidate Wealth:
Major tenants like Solomon Smith Barney removed, allowing for the rise of dominant financial firms.

The "Inside Trade" Evidence: Alvin Krongard (Alex Brown/CIA) allegedly purchased 95% of UAL options and American Airlines just days before 9/11.

The Rise of BlackRock (Aladdin AI):
BlackRock emerges as a dominant force using the 'Aladdin' platform to game out financial impacts of global catastrophes.

PHASE 4: THE COVID-19 "REPLAY" (2019–2020)

Game Out the Pandemic (Event 201):
Johns Hopkins and Carlyle Group host simulation of a coronavirus pandemic 29 days before the first case.

Utilize Genetic Targeting (ACE2):
Piot leverages 23andMe (Anne Wojcicki) to utilize patient DNA data, allegedly calibrating virus to target specific populations.

The "Revolving Door" of Regulators:
Former FDA Director Scott Gottlieb moves to Pfizer board six months before the pandemic, facilitating the transition.
