The legacy of The Italian Kitchen dates back to 1973, with a significant shift occurring when it was acquired by its current proprietor and master chef, Mike Tuozzo, in 1986. Hailing from Italian-American heritage, Tuozzo's roots trace back to the vibrant "Little Italy" of the Bronx in New York City. Surprisingly, despite his lack of formal culinary education, the art of crafting delectable cuisines comes instinctively to Mike, a testament to his upbringing and unwavering passion for food, cooking, and community service. Beyond its charming and intimate ambiance, The Italian Kitchen has earned a stellar reputation for its extensive selection of authentic Italian delicacies, all served in generous portions. Whether you're planning a group outing or embarking on a solo culinary adventure, don't miss the opportunity to visit today.

Oro Grande is home to the High Desert's only antique strip mall. It is a great little town to visit when you are looking for something exciting to do without wanting to travel too far. Even if you aren't into collecting vintage items, you might come across something amazing from your childhood. The best way to find out is to get out and see what the shops have to offer. The antique mall is located on National Trails Highway, all within view of each other.

Elmer's Bottle Tree Ranch

Just as the name says, it is a ranch made up of glass bottles and other various items. There is no other place like it. Elmer Long spent his childhood scouring the desert with his father collecting random bottles and other various items. Upon his father's passing, Elmer found himself left with a massive but strange collection of glass bottles. In 2000, Elmer built his first "bottle tree". One tree turned into ten, ten into fifty and before he knew it, there was an entire ranch of two hundred trees. Elmer Long has since passed but his eclectic masterpiece lives on. The bottle tree ranch is more than just a pleasing sight, when the wind blows, the hollow glass bottles make the most magnificent sounds.

Don't leave Oro Grande just yet, head over to Cross Eyed Cow Pizza!

Pizza is definitely made for sharing but one bite into any one of these craft pizzas and sharing will be the last thing you want to do.
