Why Print Graphics and Digital Graphics Are Not the Same Thing

By Anesa K. Chastain Jones - Advertising Insights with Anesa
Oklahoma's Choice Weekly

One thing I run into fairly often when working with advertisers is this: Someone sends over a graphic that looks fantastic on social media or on a website... but when we place it in the paper, it doesn't quite work the way they expected. And it's not because the design is bad.

It's because print and digital graphics are built very differently.

With Oklahoma's Choice Weekly preparing to return to print with our March 26th edition, this is a good time to talk about what that actually means for advertisers and their artwork.

A graphic that works perfectly online doesn't always translate directly to print. Understanding the differences helps make sure your ad looks sharp, professional, and exactly the way you intended when it appears on the page.

Resolution: The Biggest Difference

The most common issue we see with ads prepared for print is resolution. Graphics designed for social media are typically created at 72 DPI (dots per inch). That works perfectly for phones, tablets, and computer screens. But printing requires a lot more detail.

For print advertising, images should be 300 DPI at the size they will appear in the ad. If a social media graphic is used in print without that resolution, it often becomes blurry or pixelated because the image simply doesn't contain enough detail. It's one of the biggest reasons an ad can look great online but not hold up when it's printed.

Color Systems Are Different

Another difference most people don't realize involves color. Digital graphics use RGB color, which is designed for screens that create color using light. Print uses CMYK color, which is created by combining cyan, magenta, yellow, and black inks on paper.

Because these systems are different, colors can shift slightly when artwork designed for digital platforms is converted for print. Bright screen colors can appear a little different once they're reproduced with ink. This is why print ads are ideally created in CMYK from the start.

File Types Matter

The types of files used for print are also different from what we typically see for digital use. Online graphics are often saved as PNG or JPG files, which work perfectly for websites and social media.

For print, we generally prefer:

- PDF files (the most reliable for print)
- High-resolution JPG or TIFF files
- Vector artwork such as AI or EPS

These formats ensure the ad prints cleanly, with sharp text and clear images.

Print Layout Is Different Too

Digital ads are usually seen on phones where people are scrolling quickly. Print works differently.

When readers pick up a paper, they're looking at a full page. That means layout, spacing, and readability become very important.

For print ads, we often recommend:

- Clear, easy-to-read headlines
- Slightly larger text
- Clean spacing
- Strong visual structure

A design that works well on a phone screen may need a few adjustments to work just as well on paper.

Our Return to Print

Many of our readers and advertisers know that Oklahoma's Choice Weekly has been operating in a digital format for some time. We're excited to share that we will be returning to print with the March 26th edition.

Going forward, our plan is to print at the end of each month for now, while continuing to publish our digital edition online and through our app the rest of the month.

This approach allows us to combine the reach and flexibility of digital with the strong community visibility that print advertising provides.

Making Your Ad Look Its Best

Our goal is always to make sure every advertiser's message looks professional and stands out to readers.

If you're planning to advertise in the upcoming print edition and aren't sure whether your artwork is print-ready, we're always happy to help review it and make adjustments if needed. Because when your ad looks great on the page, your business looks great too. And great presentation is where effective advertising begins

Hello Spring! Well, it's almost spring. Spring showers have arrived and brought us more mud, but we always need the rain so we can't complain, right? On the plus side, the tip for mud from last month carries over for March. I know we should be getting ready for St. Patrick's Day but my mind is on Easter and prepping for spring cleaning. Easter is right around the corner and while my kids aren't into hunting eggs anymore, they still want their Easter baskets, so I have been shopping for a while. My oldest is almost 18, and I have been using the holidays as a good excuse to get them things to help set up house when the time comes. We all know how expensive that is, so a coffee maker or some small appliance in their Easter basket is a gift they are super grateful for. Plus, it gives them something else in their baskets besides candy.

Let's hop into Spring Cleaning! I will make sure a downloadable PDF of my spring-cleaning checklist is on the website and APP! I always thought the older my kids got the easier my spring cleaning would be. I was so wrong. We are so busy, it takes even longer. I now do a light clean during the week, basically everything I can do without help. Then, I deep clean that room whenever I can get the help to move big stuff. I am thinking some of the outdoor stuff we normally do, I might just hire a handy man. Things like cleaning the AC, power washing my porch, clearing away brush, my list is a mile long. I mean think about it, you are so busy and if you can afford it. Throw a little money at it and it is done. I think it is a worthwhile investment. Marge Simpson voice It'll be good for the economy.

Trendy cleaning products. Pastes are making a comeback! Why is that exciting? Well pastes have been around forever; people use to make a paste with ashes to clean pans, so forever. Nowadays they almost seem magical because they work on everything, especially on hard to clean things. The basic science is they are abrasive cleans and that's why they seem magical. When using them, don't overdo it, start with a little. Let it sit for a minute and put your back into it. The real magic is always elbow grease! I can not remember if we have ever talked about Dawn Powerwash. It isn't new but it is one of my favorite things right now. My kids use too much of it, but it is great to spray on dishes then come back and finish them later. There are a handful of DIY recipes out there. I think it is important to understand the science behind it. It isn't just foamy Dawn; it is so much more than that. Of course we know Dawn is a wonderful degreaser on its own. The added ingredients give it the extra boost that makes it special. There are surfactants which help with cutting through grease, then there is a solvent booster, Alcohol, which is one that's commonly used. So, if you find a DIY recipe and the extra ingredient is water it is probably a waste of your time and your Dawn.

These rainy days can be just as hard as winter days. Remember to be kind to yourself and others. If you are feeling off tell someone: your family, friends, even your doctor. We must ask for support during the hard times. I know the world is messy right now and that can make things feel heavy. Sometimes we just need to talk to someone who understands us. Letting it out can make us feel better and let us know we aren't alone.

Join me April 9th where we will talk about the end of school, grilling and all things sunshine. I don't know about y'all but after all this rain I need as much sunshine as I can get.

Happy Cleaning!
