Ethical Sourcing

We understand the social concern of using animal skins and pelts.

We believe NO any sheep should ever be raised for its skin alone.

Thus, we strictly require our manufacturers to source sheepskin material from abattoirs and packers as by-product of meat, which is critically different from wild animal fur.

Just like leather from cattle hides, which is beef by-product in the meat industry, sheepskin is by-product of lamb meat. All raw skins that abattoirs and packers gather originally come from farmers that raise sheep primarily for meat instead of their skins. Most value of a sheep is derived from selling the meat and only little derived from the sheepskin itself.

As a business adhere to humanity and sustainability, THE MOOD team and its business owner does not raise sheep. We strictly require our material suppliers to source sheepskin from farmers that comply with animal welfare policies, which require these farmers to use humane animal treatment in order to prevent animal abuse and animal cruelty.

Green Production

When it comes to fur products, THE MOOD understands that traditional leather tanning has been criticized for its environmental pollution and human health hazards. However, with the development of technological innovation, the process of leather tanning has been upgraded and improved.

THE MOOD takes them all seriously sustainable development, from raw materials to finished products to ensure compliance with industry-leading standard and certification.

We only source sheepskins from manufacturers that meet the ecological tanning standards. They are toxic-free operating environment and harmless treatment of materials. The toxic-free operating environment guarantees the health and safety of production personnel, and the harmless treatment of materials minimizes the use of toxic chemicals and realizes sewage recycling.

Therefore, we strictly select qualified manufacturers and provide our valued customers with high-quality products that meet international testing standards.

GOLD AWARDED TANNERIES
