Write-up on Comm Fiesta, 2024 at Gems Akademia International School

Our school's recent Commerce Fest was a magnificent celebration of entrepreneurship, creativity, and hands-on learning. Parents were invited to the ceremony in addition to the chief guests. It was a lot of fun, and the case studies, business pitches, and of course, the school band's performances made the event memorable and left the crowd in awe.

The Commerce Fest gave students ample chances to network. The audience were enlightened with plenty of important information that they weren't unaware of prior to this. The fest was very engaging with original presentations and creatively presented speeches made by students who were supported and motivated by their teachers every step of the way. In all, the afternoon left the audience discovering that commerce can be exciting and engaging. The participants developed their public speaking skills and confidence and they also had a forum to discuss and share their thoughts on a range of business-related topics at the commerce fest. It was a great learning process for the participants. To sum it up the commerce fest was a huge success and was enjoyed and celebrated by all. We eagerly await for the next

CHANGE

Life gives you important lessons. We know that already. Schools teach you lessons and give you tests, but life gives you tests that teach you a lesson. And one of these tests is how you deal with change in your life. One of my biggest changes in life was when I moved to India from the United States of America. There are major differences between the countries. One of them is the climate difference; you won't believe how long it took me to get used to the tropics. (I still am trying!) But another big change was the education system. I joined Gems Akademia in the month of April. Don't get me started on the trouble we had getting things perfect. Eventually and landed as far in 9 caie after summer break (compare to USA, it was really short). Physics and Chemistry were new to me as they were to be taught in 10th grade in the US, inventory I caught up. It was difficult, sure, but I am sure the effort will pay off. Now all change is good, but everything has a reason for its existence. I learned that it's simply just fate and destiny, making the right choices lead to the greater good. (Wise words, I know, but I swear I won't be one of those old sophisticated geniuses in the future.) This change made me stronger in a way, and I'm happy to be here as an Akademian, but it seems like I'm reaching the word limit, so that's it for the uplift of my Accendo. I'll probably be back next year!

Seasons of Life

In the grand book of life, seasons turn the page,
Each one a chapter, a stage, a unique age.
Spring, a young child, full of wonder and glee,
Blossoming like a flower, innocent and free.

Summer arrives, a spirited youth in its prime,
Like the sun's warm embrace, a radiant climb.
Autumn, a wise elder, colors rich and deep,
Leaves falling like memories, a harvest to keep.

Winter, a reflection of life's final phase,
Snowflakes like memories, each one's a trace.
Through every season, life's essence unfurled,
A reminder that time swiftly whirls.

So let's dance in the rain, under the sun's bright beams,
Embrace every moment, live out our dreams.
For life is a tapestry, woven swiftly and fully,
Let's cherish each season, live up wholly.

Travelogue: A visit to Palace of the Roys, Cossimbazar

On a Friday, after school, we boarded the Bhagirathi Express to visit the 'Palace of the Roys' at Cossimbazar, West Bengal. Upon arrival, Pallab Roy, the heir of the Palace welcomed us. The front façade of the palace building was soaked in a mesmerizing light show displaying an array of Blue, Pink, Green and Magenta. After clicking a few photographs of this spectacle, we checked-in room 5 for the night.

Next morning, the quack-quack sound of the palace ducks greeted us. As we went to the open grounds at the back of the palace we saw a pond, walking path, flowers, a special tree, a crater, long tennis courts and a fruit garden. The palace also hosts the Rath Yatra festivals and we saw a beautifully carved chariot in the palace lawns.

After a delicious breakfast, Pallab Roy took all guests on a guided tour of the palace. We saw a big hallway with photographs of Pallab Roy's ancestors, a library, wrestling ground, palace emblem, private bedrooms of the kings and queens, a Darbaar or court, store room, clocks, hand held fans and oil-based fans gymnasium, gardens, and two letters from the then Britishers ruling India conferring the title of 'Raja' to the Roys. While touring the palace, we all noticed a lot of doors. Interestingly, most of the doors were fixed and did not open. Pallab Roy explained, "these doors were meant to misguide and trap thieves in the olden days." In the afternoon we went to Murshidabad. We saw Hazarduari Palace and Museum, Jahan Kosha Cannon, Kathgola Palace and Katra Masjid. Outside Katra Masjid we bought canons, keyrings, pens shaped like swords and pistols, unicorn pens, jewelry boxes. Do consider a visit to Cossimbazar as it also allows one to explore Murshidabad. These are two iconic locations Bengal has to offer.

A Memorable Trip to Sea Beach

It was the summer holidays, and my cousins Arika and Anika, along with my aunt, were visiting us in Kolkata. They had been staying with us for about two weeks, and we had been eagerly waiting for a chance to visit a sea beach. My father, however, was tied up with work. Then, one day, to our surprise, my father called my mother, telling her to get ready within the next hour as we were heading to a nearby sea beach.

The rush was on. We hurriedly packed our bags and soon, the car arrived to pick us up from home, collecting my father from his office on the way. After traveling around 70 kilometers from the city, we made a pit stop at a Wow Momo outlet for sandwiches and desserts. After a five-hour journey, we finally reached the Sonar Bangla hotel at Mandarmani. The sea was right next to the hotel, and the sight of the high tides at night was both mesmerizing and a bit scary. After dinner and some late-night chatter, we went to bed, excited about our beach adventure the next morning.

However, when we woke up at 6:45 AM, the tides were still high, testing our patience. Walking from the breakfast area, we saw a swimming pool, where we decided to spend some time while the sea tides settled. Finally, by 10:00 AM, the water level receded, and we rushed to the beach. We spent the next three hours enjoying the sea to the fullest—collecting shells and playing with beach toys.

At 1:00 PM, we began our journey back home, arriving at 7:00 PM. The spontaneous trip was a fantastic experience, filled with excitement and memorable moments.

OVER THE SKIES

Over the skies, in the heavens,
Flying angels and reindeers roaming,
Beauty and nature at their finest,
And living with peace and animals,
Heavens, heavens, heavens.
Oh! so beautiful and joyful heavens,
Such cheerful aroma,
Makes our hearts dance,
And Santa laughing with his reindeers enjoying,
Oh! heavens how beautiful God made you,
Heavens, heavens, heavens.

THE SUN AND THE MOON

In the sky so high and blue,
Lives the sun, so warm and true.
It wakes us up with golden rays,
And shines so bright on sunny days.

The moon comes out when day is done,
To light the night, when there's no sun.
It smiles down with a gentle glow,
And watches over the world below.

The stars join in, they twinkle bright,
They dance and play all through the night.
But when the morning starts to peep,
They close their eyes and go to sleep.

The sun and moon, they never meet,
One goes away, the other's fleet.
But both are friends up in the sky,
Keeping watch on you and I.

So when you see the sun at dawn,
Or watch the moon from dusk till morn,
Remember they are always there,
To light our world with love and care

Ends with three

You wake up in the morning
You start walking with four legs
You put your eyes on everything you desire
This is the moment when you realize that you should open up.

Afternoon creeps in
You wish to please others
And when you forget the reasons of your foundation, you are misled
The Almighty tries to end up this deviation as soon as possible
You come back to your senses
This is the moment when you realize that you are unaware of almost everything.

Evening walks into the stage
Your journey of two legs witnesses its climax
You guide others upon learning from your own mistakes
Sometimes you lose yourself
Sometimes you resume your journey to fulfil your wildest dreams
You start waiting to obtain a third leg
This is the moment when you realize that you are a very small particle of this creation.

Twilight outbreaks
Still waiting to obtain a third leg
You may witness the greatest loss of your life
You may witness the greatest betrayal of your life
You may witness the greatest joy of your life
This is the moment when you realize that you did not live your life.

Slowly and slowly
Moonlight sparkles the surrounding
You return back to your home with the loss of a leg
You see yourself the same
You realize that your devotion was not towards something but towards someone
You realize that your hard-work was not to fulfil your desires
But to earn an external image
You pray to the Supreme Sorcerer to gift you another chance to grow
Yet, you wish to renounce
In a short time
Rather immediately
To resurrect and end with a story
This is the moment when you realize that peace carries the power to overcome any desire, no matter how burning it is.

Drowned in my illusion

The seas are falling, the skies are drowning
Surrounded by life my body thrives.

Albeit the flowers in my pot upstairs are wilting.

I water them.

The heat fuels my inner trepidation
masked by the air flowing into my lungs.

I am alive.

Why?

Why am I alive when I let you die?
My friend, my hands are now tainted with your green blood.
My smile falters, as did your vibrance
Now I stand above your grave, toe deep in mud.

I envy your greenery, I think to myself
As I smoothed out their hair when I felt something strange

A calloused crisp resonated in the air, they're dying again.

I water them.

I talk and I talk, doesn't it bleed out your ears?
I talk to my green friend all day long

I'd rather bleed from your words than wither an ugly brown

I water them.

Hair holds memories they say
But I held yours and plucked them down.
My wails thunder louder than the clouds as it rains-
albeit the water couldn't cleanse my sins
of the time when I painted you an ugly brown.

You're dead now.
Whom do I go to tell my stories of loneliness?

I killed you.

I say as I surround myself with thousands of brown decays.

Cadavers lay off you and your friends,
Albeit my flowers too have wilted!

Am I alone once more?

I water them.

I yell at the skies for dimming their lights,
For it made you sulk and wither.
I yell at the ball of fire to slash her sword elsewhere
For it burnt you too, along with her.
I pray for the beings to return you home
Back to my arms and your air fanning my breath
So I could talk once more,
Talk till another death.
Wither away till the graveyard was filled with cries
Of ugly dry browns and a plethora of 'here lies'.

I cry in shame as I hear your name
While going in my car leaving smoke in a trail.

Ignorance has tainted your beauty so foul.
The smoke in my car suffocates your stem.
I cry into my plastic cup albeit the straw is paper
While I go back home to water them.

I water them while the A.C. is running,
I water them while I litter the streets
I water them while I let its home burn
I water them while I kill them slowly.

But at least

I water them.

Growing Older and Facing Pressure

As each year passes and I grow older, the pressure to decide what to do with my life becomes more intense. It's a feeling that many of us experience, especially as we approach important milestones like completing Class 10. The expectations from parents, teachers, and even our own aspirations can sometimes be overwhelming.

At this stage in life, we are often asked about our future plans. "What do you want to be when you grow up?" is a question that seems to follow us everywhere. While it's exciting to think about the possibilities, it can also be daunting to make such significant decisions at a young age.

The pressure comes from various sources. Our parents want the best for us and may have high hopes for our careers. Teachers encourage us to excel academically and explore different fields. Friends might already have clear goals, making us question our own path. Amidst all this, it's obvious to feel uncertain and stressed about the future.

However, it's important to remember that it's okay not to have everything figured out right now. Life is a journey, and our paths can take many unexpected turns. What's crucial is to keep exploring our interests, learning new things, and staying open to opportunities. Each experience helps us understand ourselves better and brings us closer to finding our true passion. Instead of succumbing to pressure, we can use it as motivation to discover what we truly enjoy and excel at. It's alright to try different activities, take up various subjects, and even change our minds along the way. The key is to remain curious and resilient, knowing that it's a process of growth and self-discovery.

Moreover, seeking guidance from mentors, teachers, and counsellors can provide valuable insights and support. They can help us navigate our options, set realistic goals, and develop a plan that aligns with our strengths and interests. Conversations with family and friends can also offer different perspectives and encouragement.

In conclusion, growing older and facing the pressure of deciding our future is a natural part of life. While it may seem overwhelming at times, it's also an opportunity to learn, grow, and explore our potential. By staying curious, open-minded, and seeking support, we can gradually find our path and create a future that truly reflects who we are and what we love.

Summer at St Hugh's

Basking in the hue of the purple sunset, I trod as lightly as I could across the garden and towards the floral arch. A narrow path piercing into a dense patch of trees gave way to a lush green field encircled by dazzling peonies, with a slumbering willow at its center. I eyed it suspiciously and circled it for what felt like hours for a clue when finally, I noticed a glare coming from the tree's base. Peering in, a small glass bottle, about the size of a thumb caught my eye: it was dyed opaque blue so I couldn't figure out what was inside, and the cork was fixed in place. Fortunately, there was no need for inspection, for I had my answer. "It was poison that killed him, not the knife!", I yelled. Although I was wrong, my team did win the murder mystery, and I like to think that my enthusiasm and loudness played a major role.

Evenings at St Hugh's were always fun filled. After our routine chaotic hour-long shopping sprees after classes, sprinting across gift shop aisles and emptying my allowance at TMV, we would run back to Canterbury Road in time for dinner and evening games. Granted that two servings of lasagna immediately followed by yoga was a bad decision, the rest of the activities— game nights, treasure hunts, punting, and much more— never disappointed us. Mornings never felt slow either— meeting my circle at the cafeteria and planning our presentations and shopping itineraries before heading to assembly and lectures at Dickson Poon. Boredom was nowhere to be found, as typical classes would involve debates, presentations, lectures from renowned Oxford academics (including Jackson Lewis Scholarship winner Emma Prevot talking about AI in medicine), and workshops where we programmed drones for mock rescue missions. Learning opportunities were only part of the experience at Oxford, heartfelt conversations with my closest friends during dinner or powering through morning downpours at Leicester Square were what really made those two weeks unforgettable. It was hardly a surprise when all of us at the graduation night disco went from making dance circles to bursting into tears during the last song, then pizzas, tissues, farewells.

Time limits hardly pose a threat to genuine friendships. Now, as I stare at my signed Oxford hoodie or listen to the vinyls my friend and I scoured London to find, I feel grateful and loved. I am grateful for the wonderful staff at SBC, and the sheer generosity of Next Genius for giving me the perfect head start for my senior year.

Doris Lessing

How would you react if a reporter told you that you had been awarded the Nobel Prize in Literature?

On 11 October 2007, a Reuters correspondent informed Doris Lessing that she had been awarded the Nobel Prize in Literature. Lessing arrived in a cab at her home in north London, UK when the reporter approached her. Here she is shown sitting on the steps outside her house just after hearing the news.

Doris Lessing's body of work comprises around 50 books and spans several genres. Her writing is characterized by penetrating studies of living conditions in the 20th century, behavioural patterns, and historical developments. She was awarded the literature prize at the age of 88, making her the oldest person to ever receive the award.

Her novels include "The Grass Is Singing" (1950), the sequence of five novels collectively called "Children of Violence" (1952–1969), The "Golden Notebook" (1962), "The Good Terrorist" (1985), and five novels collectively known as "Canopus in Argos": Archives (1979–1983).

Why 'tock-tick' does not sound right to your ears

Ever wondered why we say tick-tock, not tock-tick, or ding-dong, not dong-ding: King Kong, not Kong King? Turns out it is one of the unwritten rules of English that native speakers know without knowing.

The rule is: If there are three words then the order has to go I, A, O. If there are two words then the first is I and the second is either A or O. Mish-mash, chit-chat, dilly-dally, shilly-shally, tip top, hip-hop, flip-flop, tic tac, sing song, ding dong. King Kong, ping pong.

There's another unwritten rule at work in the name Little Red Riding Hood "Adjectives in English absolutely have to be in this order: opinion-size-age-shape-colour-origin-material-purpose noun. So you can have a lovely little old rectangular green French silver whittling knife. But if you mess with that word order in the slightest you'll sound like a maniac.

That explains why we say "little green men" not "green little men," but "Big Bad Wolf" sounds like a gross violation of the "opinion (bad)-size (big)-noun (wolf)" order. It won't, though, if you recall the first rule about the I-A-O order.

That rule seems inviolable: All four of a horse's feet make exactly the same sound. But we always, always say clip-clop, never clop-clip.

This rule even has a technical name, if you care to know it-the rule of ablaut reduplication but then life is simpler knowing that we know the rule without knowing it.

Masks

In the journey, masks conceal faces with grace,
A grand ball of illusions, a beautiful embrace.
Time stretches like an endless wait,
For an eternity in anticipation's state.

The masks, once adorned, now laid aside,
Revealing truths, where illusions hide.
Numbness injected by the unveiled sight,
After the ball's charm fades into the night.

You learn, thinking you've mastered the art,
Yet the journey smirks, playing its part.
With a mocking smile, it slyly imparts,
Hold on , I have countless masks, infinite , before the your soul departs.
