New $28,000 Police Records Processing Rollout Already Bearing Fruit

By Vivian Tyson

Saunders... "Going forward, I will seek to strategically use my expertise to solve the most vexing problems, and in doing so, hopefully save TCIG both time and money,"

Government is crowing about its $28,000 new

Police Record processing roll-out, which it said was already bearing rich fruits.

The e-government portfolio has been assigned to the Office of the Premier since February. However, Deputy Premier and Minister of Finance Hon. E. Jay Saunders, who is the tech expert in the Washington Misick Administration, after the myriad of complaints from the public on the snail's pace at which police records were being processed, saw it fit to put his expertise to use, thereby landing the new system.

According to the deputy premier, the new electronic police record processing system, which came on stream on Wednesday (June 28) managed to process a whopping 65 police records under 12 hours.

"The e-government is still under the Office of the Premier, as it has been since Feb. 22. However, as it (police records processing) was a very vexing problem, I decided to use my IT expertise to address it," Saunders explained. "The new application took three months to develop at a cost of US$28,000, with the total process, including procurement, taking 6 months."

He added: "The new Police Records Application was made available for public use (part of the beta testing period) at 8 pm last night (Tuesday). Overnight 65 applications were made and processed. Those applications are now ready to be signed and picked up."

Saunders pledged to waste no time, going forward, to solve the IT issues that may arise in government.

"Going forward, I will seek to strategically use my expertise to solve the most vexing problems, and in doing so, hopefully save TCIG both time and money," he said.

The following is a statement from the Royal Turks and Caicos Islands Police Force concerning the new police records improving efficiency: The processing of police records is done under the ambit of the Royal Turks and Caicos Islands Police Force. That entity had become the recipient of harsh criticisms for the slowness with which it processed the records after changing over to an electronic system.

Some customers complained that their police records took up to six months to process, with no tangible answers coming from that office.

In a statement, informing the public of the new rollout, the Royal Turks and Caicos Islands Police Force said over the past months it has been working on improving the system, to make it more efficient.

"Over the past months, we have continuously been improving our infrastructural works in order to reduce the waiting period and make the process less cumbersome," the release stated.

The Police Records Office noted that the new system is slated to become a one-stop shop, where, instead of going to the treasury to pay the processing fee and the post office for stamps, both can be paid for online using a debit or credit card.

"This new system is a testing phase which introduces a one-stop payment system and shorter wait time. Applicants will now have the option of paying online the $10 Processing Fee and the $10. Stamp fee via Debit or Credit Cards.

"The applications are processed and persons can collect their Police Records within five working days. Applicants who don't have a debit or credit card can continue making payments at the Treasury," the RTCIPF said in the statement.

The RTCIPF said that the live testing phase would come to an end on July 31, and August 1, the system would be fully operational.

Deputy Commissioner of Police Rodney Adams expressed thanks to Deputy Premier Saunders and his team for feverishly working to achieve the milestone.

"This new system will significantly reduce the timeframe in which records are processed. We expect records to turn around within five days initially. I wish to thank the Ministry of Finance, led by the Deputy Premier and his team, and the Information Technology team supporting us," Adams said.

He added: "The officers within the Records Department and the IT team of the RTCIPF who have been working around the clock thereby allowing us to reach this milestone, I say thanks.

"I also wish to express my gratitude to the public for their patience. I know at times you were frustrated because of the inconveniences, but there is finally a light at the end of the tunnel".

In the meantime, the RTCIPF is asking those already applied for a police record and were yet to receive a voucher to re-apply.

'I Am Not One Of Them'

Governor Her Excellency Daniel Selvaratnam (right) and Chief Justice Mabel Agyemang stand at attention during the singing of the National Anthem and the National Song

“...There are some among us who would want the country to be under British rule forever. I am not one of those persons.”

Those were some of the utterances made by Opposition Leader Hon. Edwin Astwood as he gave his welcome speech to new Governor, Her Excellency Dileeni Daniel Selvaratnam, in the House of Assembly on Thursday. Astwood said he believes that time has come for the Turks and Caicos Islands to chart its own course as an independent country, so as to govern its own affairs rather than to be dictated by a foreign power.

“I also believe that the time has come for an elected government, and an elected opposition, to show the people that both can perform their constitutional roles with passion and zeal, while demonstrating that, though being different parties, we are one people. “I sincerely welcome you (Governor Daniel Selvaratnam) here today in this formal capacity, there are many amongst us who are ready for the Master /servant relationship between the UK and the TCI to come to an end,” an apparent dyed-in-the-wool Astwood asserted.

Astwood further emphasized that local leaders should begin to prepare the people for determining their own destiny.

“I believe that it is now, more than at any time in our history, that we as Leaders must prepare our people for Self Determination. The time has come to express our full confidence in our people to lead our country as an independent nation.

“I am a strong believer, Her Excellency, that ALL people should have the opportunity to think freely, to communicate freely, to manage their own affairs with others freely, to choose who their friends are freely, to choose whom to like and whom to dislike freely, to choose the destiny of the country and the people freely, and not simply be comfortable with relegating ultimate power and control to others, especially to individuals living half a world away,” the opposition leader further emphasized.

He accentuated that there should be no way in this dispensation that the TCI people should still have parliamentary and cabinet decisions having to be signed off by and approved by “Those who are not born of here, those who do not live here, those who do not understand the struggles being faced here, and those who do not understand the aspirations of the people living here.”

Astwood assured Governor Daniel-Selvaratnam that his speech was not a matter of him drawing the battle line, but rather to be taken as the Turks and Caicos People yearning for the British to see and treat them as equals rather than subjects.

“...That is not meant to be contentious or combative in any way. Many of us look forward to the day when our leaders can dialogue with British leaders as equals, and not as subjects, forming voluntary relationships.

“We must be cognizant of, and know, all positions in a historical context. We must know those things that live in the events of the past, and those things that live in us, which are part of us in the present,” Astwood noted.

He added: “Knowing the story of our people is knowing our existence and the potential that we contain in ourselves. It makes us see ourselves as being empowered and capable in this world, instead of believing ourselves to be forever a depended and colonized country.

“Therefore, I recognize all those who had occupied this land we call our home, the Turks and Caicos Islands. To that end, we think of the native Lucayans who occupied this land as far back as A.D 600.

“We think of those who came in 1512 and 1709 and claimed this land on behalf of the Spanish, French, and then the British Empire, while enslaving the Indigenous populations. We think of those who were forced to come here as slaves, from Africa, to work in the salt ponds and plantations.

“We think of those whose families came here as migrants, and we think of those who have come in recent times.

We are remorseful and grateful for all who played a role in our country’s journey to this point here today.”

Astwood pointed out that, for many in the Caribbean region, including the TCI: “The fight to get to where we are today, has been a very painful experience, because the British rule had been carried out with imperialism, dominance, control, and submission, and many residents of the English-speaking Caribbean are resentful towards the United Kingdom, for this history.

“For much of its early history, the British ruled their empire through terror. The colonies were run as a military dictatorship, often under martial law, and the majority of colonial governors were military officers. “Special” courts and courts-martial were set up to deal with dissidents, and those who resist enslavement and oppression.

“These so-called courts handed out rough and speedy injustices. Normal judicial procedures were replaced by rule through fear; resistance was crushed, and rebellion suffocated. There was the absence of law, other than that decreed by a military Governor.

“From 1804, until no more than a decade ago, we experienced the independence of many Caribbean countries and the democratic celebrations observing these achievements. Many of our Neighbours now celebrate the value of being able to have the determination of the government, the determination of choice, giving power to the population to choose their own destiny.

“Unlike many of the African nations, who never had the opportunity to carry out the process of development before achieving independence, as they went from absolute freedom, to the worst of slavery, and then passed to republics, we in the TCI have had time to learn and adopt best practices, put in place institutions of good governance, earn our own money, and have learned what development really means. Therefore, we must by now be thinking of giving power to the people and to the country.”

The unprofessional professional

By Sandra Currie: Originally printed in the Jamaica Observer

Some people in the workplace make life uncomfortable for other employees.

One definition of professionalism states that it is "a person's ability, competence, and behaviour in a particular profession. It is aiming for high standards, a remarkable performance, and better connections with patrons and co-workers".

It aims to develop a courteous attitude when interacting with one's peers at the workplace. It is a style of conduct typically designed to be composed, in control, impartial, cordial, and generous. It combines several traits, not just academic proficiency or polite behaviour. All of this comprises professionalism, but, alas, not all who claim professionalism possess these qualities, despite being super certified and trained to the pinnacle.

The workplace throws people of varying personalities, attitudes, and behaviours together in a space and they are forced to synergise. This synergy has the propensity to produce unmatched success. It can also manifest hell or heaven on Earth depending on where you are hired and with whom you work.

In an office environment, it's important to be thoughtful when it comes to your interactions, acknowledging other people's time and how you treat them. However, you must never lose sight of the fact that people will be people, so lower your expectations when you meet that 'professional' with whom you will be required to spend some time, irrespective of how long.

According to Katy Curameng, director of career planning and development at the University of Massachusetts, "In the working world, your professionalism incorporates the way you carry yourself, your attitude, and the ways you communicate with others. Being professional can ensure a positive first impression, successful interpersonal relationships, and a lasting reputation within your organisation and industry."

This is the ideal, but in reality, there is always that one office tyrant who is clad daily in a suit masquerading as a professional, demoniacally foaming at the mouth and terrorising all. They totally ignore the importance of workplace etiquette and how critical it is to ensure that their presence not be a burden on others' work experience while employed to the organisation. The significance of a legacy to be proud of is totally lost as they trudge through the office like an obnoxious drill sergeant who must be saluted at every turn.

Higher level learning institutions will deliver multiple lectures on the subject of professionalism and its importance. Being a professional requires that the requisite knowledge, skills, and development are displayed in the execution of one's duties. Seniority should teach an individual something about professionalism, but this is not always the case, despite their possession of a catalogue of degrees â€“ not everyone is trainable. Practising proper workplace professionalism should matter, but this is of no concern to an amoral individual. Employees who act professionally and respect others rarely encounter disagreements or conflicts.

Success and how it is achieved is different for everyone, but engaging workplace decorum can accelerate you regardless of your career goal. If you honour commitments; practise professionalism; and stay dedicated, productive, and respectful of those around you, building an excellent reputation and workplace likeability within your organisation will happen naturally.

Tourist Board Out; Experience Turks and Caicos In!

DDMO Board Members convene first meeting.

As of July 1, what the country and world have come to know as the Turks and Caicos Islands Tourist Board will cease and will be replaced by "Experience Turks and Caicos", the promulgating arm for the much touted Destination Marketing and Management Organization (DDMO). According to government, the change is aimed to enhance the tourism industry in the region and provide a fresh approach to marketing and managing the destination.

Government stated that prior to the implementation of the transition, Minister of Tourism Hon. Josephine Connolly, along with other officials from the Turks and Caicos Tourist Board, convened a meeting with the board's staff on June 21, 2023. The purpose of the meeting, according to a news release, was to discuss the impending dissolution of the Tourist Board, which was to be debated in the House of Assembly.

During the meeting, staff members were informed about their separation packages, and rectifications were made to address previous miscalculations and misinformation. Connolly expressed disappointment regarding the misinformation provided in previous letters and acknowledged that appropriate legal advice was not sought initially.

However, she emphasized that labor laws and the guidelines outlined in the Turks and Caicos Tourist Board's Staff Policies and Procedures Manual necessitated the provision of separation packages. The board is committed to complying with these regulations.

Miquel Swann, the Immediate Past Interim Director, clarified that initial miscalculations and incorrect advice led to some individuals receiving double payments. He assured the staff that decisions regarding final compensation and separation packages were made in accordance with labor laws and established guidelines.

For her part, Clara Gardiner, Chairman of the Turks and Caicos Tourist Board, expressed the board's satisfaction with the revised calculations and extended apologies for the miscommunication and misinformation that had occurred. She expressed gratitude to the staff for their dedicated service and pledged to ensure a smooth and transparent winding-up process.

According to government, the introduction of Experience Turks and Caicos is expected to bring fresh perspectives and strategies to promote tourism in the region.

"With this transition, the Turks and Caicos Islands aims to attract more visitors, offer unique experiences, and continue to grow as a sought-after destination. As the new Destination Marketing and Management Organization takes the helm, stakeholders and tourists alike are optimistic about the positive impact it will have on the tourism industry in the Turks and Caicos Islands," the release from the Tourism Ministry said.

On Monday, June 26, Experience Turks and Caicos convened its first-ever Board of Directors meeting, marking a significant milestone in the shaping and coordination of the archipelago's burgeoning tourism sector.

The DDMO, a pioneering public-private social partnership, is said to be looking about ensuring the long-term sustainability and continued growth of the tourism industry in the ten islands of Turks and Caicos.

The Board of Directors, consisting of representatives from both the public and private sectors, convened to deliberate on strategies and chart a course that should solidify Turks and Caicos as a premier global tourist destination.

During the meeting, the board received updates on the recruitment status for new staff and discussed plans to finalize hiring senior executives for the organization in the upcoming weeks.

"As a collaborative initiative, Experience Turks and Caicos, emphasizes the importance of partnerships between the public and private sectors in realising the vision of a sustainable and thriving tourism sector. By leveraging the expertise and resources of both sectors, Experience Turks and Caicos, seeks to foster innovation, strengthen destination management, and enhance the visitor experience," the Ministry of Tourism release said.

The board also explored new marketing and destination branding opportunities, acknowledging the crucial role of effective promotion in attracting discerning travellers to the Turks and Caicos Islands.

"With its pristine beaches, vibrant culture, and breathtaking landscapes, Turks and Caicos is poised to captivate the global tourism market, and Experience Turks and Caicos is committed to showcasing the destination's unique offerings to the world," the release further noted.

The inaugural Board of Directors meeting, according to the Tourism Ministry, heralds a new era in the tourism industry of Turks and Caicos, as Experience Turks and Caicos takes the helm in shaping the future of destination management.

"With its unwavering focus on sustainability, collaboration, and innovation, Experience Turks and Caicos will spearhead initiatives that enhance the visitor experience, elevate destination branding, and drive the long-term success of the tourism sector," the release continued.

It added: "The journey has begun, and Experience Turks and Caicos anticipates a bright and prosperous future for the tourism industry of the archipelago. Stay tuned for further updates on the Ministry and Experience Turks and Caicos' mission to position Turks and Caicos as a world-class destination."

The Loren At Turtle Cove To Redefine Luxury In The TCI

Ground-breaking for construction of The Loren At Turtle Cove Resort Condos and Villas on Thursday. From Left Mark Sage of Olympic Construction; Hon. Jamell Robinson – Minister for Infrastructure; Governor Her Excellency Anya Williams; Premier Hon. Washington Misick; Walter Gardiner of Regency Christies International Real Estate; Tom McCosker, representative of the Loren Hotel; Tourism Minister Hon. Josephine Connolly; and The Loren Turtle Cove Development Partner, Arik Kislin.

The highly anticipated ground-breaking ceremony for The Loren at Turtle Cove, the third resort under the esteemed Loren brand, took place Thursday, June 15, marking a significant milestone for the renowned hotel chain.

Amidst an air of excitement and anticipation, guests and dignitaries, including Premier Hon. Washington Misick, Deputy Governor Her Excellency Any Williams, Minister of Tourism Hon. Josephine Connolly, Minister of Infrastructure Hon. Jamell Robinson, gathered at the picturesque site next to the beach, to witness the remarkable event.

Construction is set to commence immediately, and The Loren at Turtle Cove is expected to open its doors to guests in late 2026.

The third resort by the Loren brand aims to set a new standard for luxury hospitality in the Turks and Caicos Islands, combining contemporary design with a deep appreciation for the natural surroundings. The hotel's architectural plans incorporate sustainable and eco-friendly elements to ensure minimal environmental impact. With its striking blend of modern elegance and island charm, The Loren at Turtle Cove promises to be a sanctuary for the discerning traveler, seeking a serene and indulgent retreat. The resort, which will open in 2026, and boasting six beachfront villas, 25 condominium units, and a 34-room resort hotel, will deliver breathtaking ocean views for its astute travelers.

In line with The Loren brand's commitment to fostering connections with the local community, The Loren at Turtle Cove pledges to create numerous employment opportunities for residents.

"We are thrilled to break ground on The Loren at Turtle Cove, our third resort under the Loren brand," said Tom McCosker, representative of the Loren Hotel, calling the ground-breaking a milestone.

He said the construction of The Loren would redefine luxury in the Caribbean.

The first Loren Hotel was constructed in Bermuda in 2017, and according to McCosker, the aim was to establish a boutique brand, and to offer the ultimate guest experience.

Saying that the model exceeded their expectation, McCosker pointed out that the aim was also to ensure that all its rooms were great rooms, with all being on the same level of zenith quality.

"We didn't want to find any location to build on, we wanted to find the best location the destination has to offer. We didn't want to maximize the number of villas and condos, we wanted to optimize the number for the property. And we didn't want to a restaurant to simply be an amenity of the hotel, we wanted it to be the heart and soul of the property and community," he said, noting that that was the idea when they started out in Bermuda.

Governor Her Excellency Anya Williams, said the project does have history in the Turks and Caicos Islands, as a project for that site was re-reviewed in 2014. "So, we are very pleased that May 2022, we re-approved a development agreement for this project, and that now we are actually seeing a shovel in the ground...because that's what's most important," she said. "We look forward for this development coming to fruition to the investment that's being made. From what we've seen, it is a beautiful property, we look forward to job opportunities that it is going to provide. And even more so, we look forward for persons being able to come to TCI, to enjoy our true natural beauty, as we continue to build brand Turks and Caicos," the Deputy Governor added.

For his part, Premier Hon. Washington Misick said he was looking forward to the resort's ribbon cutting.

"We hope at the opening we will be able to collect taxes," the premier quipped. "So, it is critical that we get the job done."

He said the Turks and Caicos Islands had a big problem, which is trying to contain all of the development interests targeted towards the country. "We are about creating social synergy. My government wants to see triple bottom sustainability...the environment, the economy, and we must never forget that at the end of the day, it must be about people. It must be about the people who live here, it must be about the people who come here, and it ultimately must be about creating an inclusive environment where everyone could live in harmony. To the extent that that gets out of balance, because of greed or for any other surreptitious motive, it spoils it for all of us," the premier warned.

Walter Gardiner Jr., whose real estate company Regency Christies International Real Estate is responsible for selling the property, dubbed the event a great day in the history of the Turks and Caicos.

"...Not because we are doing another ground-breaking of one of so many projects that happen in the Turks and Caicos. This project is very unique. A few of the unique things about this project that stood out to me, and I want to mention here today. First of all, it is a true low-density product," Gardiner said, emphasizing that all of the rooms will face the water, whether to the beach or the marina.

He said The Loren at Turtle Cove could breathe more life into the local boating industry.

Gardiner also pointed out that The Loren brand is known for supporting local culture, instead of imposing a foreign culture where it plants its stakes.

"It is no better example of that than the fact that this brand chose two local companies to lead the charge for two important factors as it relates to development – and that is construction, which is headed by Olympic Construction and the real estate, which is headed by our company – Regency Christies International Real Estate.

"So, we thank the developers for their confidence in local expertise, and we are looking forward for them embracing other expertise as they develop this wonderful resort," Gardiner said. Development Partner Arik Kislin, who told the audience that he has been working in the TCI for the past 17 years, was proud to have watched Providenciales developed into what it is today. "I feel very fortunate to become part of this community...it is truly a special place," he said. Kislin revealed that when he saw the property some 11 years ago, immediately formed a vision for it.

"I have a vision to make sure that this piece of property, and the uniqueness of it would experience something of a six-star joy and a true full luxury experience, low density quality product," he said. He pointed out that in-keeping with the legacy of the former Third Turtle Resort that was raised in the mid-1960s the restaurant that would be built on the property would be called the Third Turtle Café.

Olympic Construction was represented at the event by Gwen Harvey.

Cheshire Hall Plantation

Thomas Stubbs, brother of Wade Stubbs owner of Wade's Green Plantation (Bellefield) convinced Thomas to seek his fortune in the Caicos Islands. Thomas Stubbs settled on Providenciales (then known as Blue Caicos) in the late 1700s and name his plantation after his home county. The buildings were constructed from locally cut limestone.

Up to the early 1800s, Cheshire Hall was the most important site on Providenciales and at its height was comprised of about five thousand acres and employed hundreds of slaves.

After a few decades of mild success, the boll weevil insect, soil degradation and hurricane damage put an end to the cotton industry in the Turks and Caicos.

Full Swearing-In Speech By Her Excellency Governor Dileeni Daniel-Selvaratnam

Your Honour Mr Speaker, Your Ladyship the Chief Justice, Honourable Premier, Honourable Leader of the Opposition, Your Excellency the Deputy Governor, Honourable Attorney General, Honourable Ministers, Honourable Members of this House, former Members of the House, Commissioner of Police, and ladies and gentlemen of these beautiful islands, Good morning. Mr Speaker may I first thank you for the opportunity to address this House.

Your Ladyship for administering the oath. Honourable Premier and Honourable Leader of the Opposition for your kind welcome remarks and Her Excellency the Deputy Governor for your admirable and dedicated service as Acting Governor over the last three months. Thank you all for your presence here today to bear witness to my swearing-in as the 16th Governor of the Turks and Caicos Islands.

It is a great honour, in which I have pledged to serve, in sincerity, the people of the Turks and Caicos Islands, working with your elected representatives in support of all areas of the nation's life. In this resolve, I will seek to protect the well-being of all and work to support the advancement of national development of the Turks and Caicos Islands for a more sustainable and prosperous future. During the last six months, since my appointment was announced,

I had the welcome opportunity to meet Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Premier, Her Excellency the Deputy The Governor's Office Turks and Caicos Islands Governor, Hon. Attorney General, the Hon. Ministers of Immigration and Health; the Commissioner of Police and a number of government officials. In March 2023, I also had the opportunity to attend the Northern Caribbean Security Summit as part of the TCI delegation, where I spent a valuable three days discussing critical issues of national security with leads from a number of partner agencies.

I glad to now be here and look forward to spending much of my first ten days visiting each of your constituencies to meet as many people as possible. As I make my way through every inhabited island, I will listen and hope to begin to appreciate your rich and multifarious societies; to witness with my own eyes the beauty and diversity of each of the islands; and to learn about the gains and challenges these bring.

I am grateful to elected members for facilitating the tours, which are a key priority for me. I am sure each constituency is unique and only through meeting as many of you as possible, can I begin to understand your respective concerns and ambitions for the islands and how I must shape my Governorship.

My previous role taught me much about the issues and challenges Caribbean Territories face, our relationship with the United Kingdom and the region more widely. I will build on that experience to deliver the constitutional responsibility I now come to bear. I am acutely aware of some of the issues on your minds, in particular national security, social development, the Constitution and the economy.

My meetings with elected representatives, communities, officials and bodies, over this coming month, will equip The Governor's Office Turks and Caicos Islands me with what I need to help focus my priorities to serve best the interests of the Turks and Caicos Islands. Tackling the present challenge, of ensuring the safety of these precious islands requires, now more than ever, a strong relationship between the police, partner agencies and our communities that they serve.

I will be working closely with all involved, including international partners, to address the stark levels of criminality and much needed justice reforms to tackle this. Through partnership and by ensuring the rule of law prevails, we can ensure appropriate protections, continue to welcome visitors and reassure investors that these islands remain safe and prosperous.

The Archbishop of Canterbury said during the Coronation ceremony of King Charles III: 'We crown a King to serve. The King of Kings, Jesus Christ was anointed not to be served, but to serve. He creates the unchangeable law of good authority that with the privilege of power comes the duty to serve.' As I embark on my Governorship,

I will seek to serve firmly the interests of the Turks and Caicos Islands and commit to taking forward my duties with humility, integrity, and openness. May God bless these beautiful by nature islands Turks and Caicos, and all those who call it home.

Le Smoking Tuxedo

Le Smoking tuxedo 1966

"For a woman, Le Smoking is an indispensable garment with which she finds herself continually in fashion, because it is about style not fashion. Fashions come and go, but style is forever."

Yves Saint Laurent

This week, I'd like us to take a look back into fashion history, specifically, 'Le Smoking tuxedo' of 1966. This garment, like the bikini or mini dress, is just another in a long list of once-controversial women's garments which have now blended into the fashion mainstream.

The name nods to the 19th Century men's smoking jackets, whose silk lapels were designed to allow any ash falling from cigars or cigarettes to slide off, keeping the jacket clean.

Revealed in his Haute Couture Fall/Winter 1966 collection, it came at a time when it was frowned upon for women to wear trousers in public. The reactions between fashionistas and the layman were quite different. Fashionistas had overwhelmingly positive reactions whilst the masses did not gravitate towards the new style. Only one was sold at the time. However, the label's younger clientele was quick to purchase it, eventually making the tuxedo a classic.

The silhouette pioneered minimalist androgynous styles for women, as well as the general popularity of pantsuits today.

When it was first revealed, it was the first time that any couturier had presented trousers as an option for eveningwear, and women wearing it were refused entry by some restaurants the following season. Undoubtedly, one of the main reasons 'Le Smoking' was initially controversial was the fact that it dared to challenge the gender regulations of fashion. Today, it exists as a symbol of gender openness and flexibility. The design of the 'Le Smoking' suit at the time was a costume of rebellion.

When socialite Nan Kempner was turned away from restaurant Le Côte Basque in New York, she removed her trousers and wore the blazer as a mini dress, single-handedly mocking the establishment's dated dress code.

Le Smoking tuxedos found their moment to shine when the 70's were entered. That new decade gave way to more adventurous fashions and more rebels willing to try them—a far cry from the conservative '60s.

Today, 'Le Smoking' is a versatile staple for the modern woman—make it classy with some pumps and minimal accessories or go bolder with a crop top underneath and a bold lip.

This suit is constantly being reinvented, solidifying itself as a truly timeless article that should be in every woman's arsenal.

DECR hosts Environmental Stewardship Awards

The Department of Environment and Coastal Resources hosted the Environmental Stewardship Awards, on Wednesday, June 28, coinciding with World Environment and World Oceans Day.

The DECR took the opportunity to honour individuals and organisations that have kindly contributed their assistance to the DECR to further conservation and an environmentally sustainable Turks and Caicos.

This year, 41 recipients were recognised for their stewardship at an event held in Providenciales, after a brief hiatus.

"We are elated to be resuming the annual Environmental Stewardship Awards. When we first acknowledged the community's commitment to environmental issues, in 2014, we did so with deep gratitude to those who assisted us to further our mission and vision of ensuring that the TCI remains 'Beautiful by Nature,'" said Director of the DECR, Lormeka Williams.

Director Williams continued: "We are fortunate to be bolstered by a community that cares, a community that tries, and we are stronger together! Our work at the DECR relies on the collective effort: action, education, presence and concern – We see you and we extend our deepest thanks for all you have done for the Department, and for the broader community".

Guests also had an opportunity to hear about an exciting project the DECR is collaborating with the Joint Nature Conservation Committee (JNCC) on: Technical assistance programme for effective coastal-marine management in the TCI.

The programme, which is developing an enhanced evidence base to support status assessment and management programmes in coastal and marine environments, provides tools, in-depth support and capacity building to assist decision making in implementing a new TCIG Environment Strategy.

"If you, your school or organisation would like more information on how you can become an environmental steward, or you would like to sign up as a Community Conservation Partner, please contact the DECR's Environment Outreach Coordinator, Amy Avenant aavenant@gov.tc," a news release from the DECR Instructed.

Tips to yield a restful sleep

After a night spent tossing and turning, you wake up feeling like a few of the Seven Dwarves: sleepy and grumpy. Restless nights and weary mornings can become more frequent as we get older and our sleep patterns change. In women, it often begins around the time of menopause, when hot flashes and other symptoms awaken them. Later in life, there tends to be a decrease in the number of hours slept. There are also some changes in the way the body regulates circadian rhythms. This internal clock helps your body respond to changes in light and dark. When it undergoes a shift with age, it can be harder to fall asleep and stay asleep through the night.

We all have trouble sleeping from time to time, but when insomnia persists day after day, it can become a real problem. Beyond making us tired and moody, a lack of sleep can have serious effects on our health, increasing our propensity for obesity, heart disease, and type 2 diabetes.

Tired of feeling tired? Here are some simple tips to help you get to sleep:

EXERCISE

Going for a brisk daily walk won't just trim you down, it will also keep you up less often at night. Exercise boosts the effect of natural sleep hormones such as melatonin. A study in the journal Sleep found that postmenopausal women who exercised for about three and a half hours a week had an easier time falling asleep than women who exercised less often. Just watch the timing of your workouts. Exercising too close to bedtime can be stimulating. Morning workouts that expose you to bright daylight will help the natural circadian rhythm.

RESERVE BED FOR SLEEP

Do not use your bed as an office for answering phone calls and responding to emails. Also, avoid watching late-night television there. The bed needs to be a stimulus for sleeping, not for wakefulness.

KEEP YOUR BEDROOM COMFORTABLE

Television is not the only possible distraction in your bedroom. Ambience can affect your sleep quality, too. Make sure your bedroom is as comfortable as possible. Ideally, you want a quiet, dark, cool environment. All of these things promote sleep onset.

START A SLEEP RITUAL

When you were a child and your mother read you a story and tucked you into bed every night, this comforting ritual helped lull you to sleep. Even in adulthood, a set of bedtime rituals can have a similar effect. Rituals help signal the body and mind that it is coming to be time for sleep. Drink a glass of warm milk. Take a bath or listen to calming music to unwind before bed.

EAT – BUT NOT TOO MUCH

A grumbling stomach can be distracting enough to keep you awake, but so can an overly full belly. Avoid eating a big meal within two to three hours of bedtime. If you are hungry right before bed, eat a small healthy snack (such as an apple with a slice of cheese or a few whole wheat crackers) to satisfy you until breakfast.

AVOID ALCOHOL AND CAFFEINE

If you do have a snack before bed, wine and chocolate should not be part of it. Chocolate contains caffeine, which is a stimulant. Surprisingly, alcohol has a similar effect. It makes you a little sleepy, but it is actually a stimulant and it disrupts sleep during the night. Also, stay away from anything acidic (such as citrus fruits and juices) or spicy, which can give you heartburn.

DE-STRESS

The bills are piling up and your to-do list is a mile long. Daytime worries can bubble to the surface at night. Stress is a stimulus. It activates the fight-or-flight hormones that work against sleep. Give yourself time to wind down before bed. Learning some form of the relaxation response can promote good sleep and can also reduce daytime anxiety. To relax, try deep breathing exercises. Inhale slowly and deeply, and then exhale.

GET CHECKED

An urge to move your legs, snoring, and a burning pain in your stomach, chest, or throat are symptoms of three common sleep disrupters – restless legs syndrome, sleep apnea, and gastroesophageal reflux disease or GERD. If these symptoms are keeping you up at night or making you sleepy during the day, see your doctor for an evaluation.

US Approves Lab-Grown' Chicken Meat

Pieces of Good Meat's cultivated chicken is shown at the Eat Just office in Alameda, Calif., Wednesday, June 14, 2023. The Agriculture Department issued final approvals Wednesday, June 21 to California firms Upside Foods and Good Meat to sell the products, known as "lab grown" or "cultivated" meat.

United States (AP)— For the first time, US regulators on Wednesday approved the sale of chicken made from animal cells, allowing two California companies to offer "lab-grown" meat to the nation's restaurant tables and eventually, supermarket shelves.

The Agriculture Department gave the green light to Upside Foods and Good Meat, firms that had been racing to be the first in the US to sell meat that doesn't come from slaughtered animals — what's now being referred to as "cell-cultivated" or "cultured" meat as it emerges from the laboratory and arrives on dinner plates.

The move launches a new era of meat production aimed at eliminating harm to animals and drastically reducing the environmental impacts of grazing, growing feed for animals and animal waste.

"Instead of all of that land and all of that water that's used to feed all of these animals that are slaughtered, we can do it in a different way," said Josh Tetrick, co-founder and chief executive of Eat Just, which operates Good Meat. The companies received approvals for federal inspections required to sell meat and poultry in the US. The action came months after the US Food and Drug Administration deemed that products from both companies are safe to eat. A manufacturing company called Joann Biologics, which works with Good Meat, was also cleared to make the products.

Cultivated meat is grown in steel tanks, using cells that come from a living animal, a fertilised egg or a special bank of stored cells. In Upside's case, it comes out in large sheets that are then formed into shapes like chicken cutlets and sausages. Good Meat, which already sells cultivated meat in Singapore, the first country to allow it, turns masses of chicken cells into cutlets, nuggets, shredded meat and satays.

But don't look for this novel meat in US grocery stores anytime soon. Cultivated chicken is much more expensive than meat from whole, farmed birds and cannot yet be produced on the scale of traditional meat, said Ricardo San Martin, director of the Alt:Meat Lab at University of California Berkeley.

The companies plan to serve the new food first in exclusive restaurants: Upside has partnered with a San Francisco restaurant called Bar Crenn, while Good Meat dishes will be served at a Washington, DC, restaurant run by chef and owner Jose Andrés.

Company officials are quick to note the products are meat, not substitutes like the Impossible Burger or offerings from Beyond Meat, which are made from plant proteins and other ingredients.

Globally, more than 150 companies are focusing on meat from cells, not only chicken but pork, lamb, fish and beef, which scientists say has the biggest impact on the environment.

Action from the youth cricket competition

Rawle Gill, Cricket Development Officer at the TCICA presents the championship trophy to Oseta Jolly Primary School.

The competition was fierce both with the bat and the ball.

The females held their own during the tournament.

Alberique McIntosh was named MVP for the tournament.

Oseta Jolly are champions of the Turks and Caicos Islands Cricket Association Inter-Primary School Friendly Competition after turning back the challenges of the Thelma Lightbourne Primary in the final of the three-team competition.

The match which was played the Downtown Ball Park saw the Kenisha Thompson-coached Oseta Jolly taking first knock and scored 87 runs from their allotted eight overs, with Bradley Singh top-scoring with 46 runs.

In reply, Thelma Lightbourne were skittled out for 32 runs, with the top-scorer getting a mere six runs, giving Oseta Jolly a 55 run win.

Female player, Alberique was named player of the tournament.

Rawle Gill, Development Officer for the Turks and Caicos Islands Cricket Association, and who coordinated the tournament, said the competition was geared towards developing the next generation of cricketers, to keep the national sport alive in these islands. "We had a programme running for 10 weeks. Every Saturday from 9a.m. to 11a.m. So, coming to the end of the school term, we decided to have a playoff among the three schools – Enid Capron, Oseta Jolly and Thelma Lightbourne," Gill said.

He told NewslineTCI that Cricket needs to return to its glory days in the TCI, and that, the tournament was one way of doing so. He said there is currently a gap between the senior players and youth players. And so, having events such as the primary school tournament was aimed to bridge that gap.

"We are trying to bring back cricket to the Turks and Caicos Islands, because Cricket is the national sport. And, after the senior cricketers would have left, well, we don't have anyone else," Gill lamented. "So, we have to bring the youth in it now. The transition from primary school to secondary school...what we intend to do is to have them register with the TCI Cricket Association, so they would have forms to take home to their parents and then return...so then, when they get into high school, we still have a grip on them, so we can continue with the cricket." Gill pointed out that the aim of the Cricket Association is pave the way for at least one youth player to be included in the senior team, to help with their development.

"What we are trying to do is that each team in the senior men's competition, should have a youth. Right now, we do not have any youth who has reached that standard. And so, we want to raise the standard so that each team must have a youth player in the future," pointed out, telling us that the aim of the competition was to get them up to speed, so that when the time comes for them to make the transition into the senior team, they would do so seamlessly. "So right now, we are getting them to know the basics and then we are going to change them from the soft ball to the hard ball," Gill said.
