Room styles

Boardroom Style

The boardroom style setup features a rectangular table, or several tables, positioned in the center of the room with chairs placed around it. This arrangement is commonly used for agenda-focused meetings or video conferencing.

It is best suited for shorter sessions involving open discussion, such as focus groups, as it allows for close proximity to each other. Additionally, if your conference includes workshop sessions that depend on a mid-sized group of people engaging in discussions, the boardroom style may be a suitable choice for your corporate event.

Auditorium Style

The auditorium style setup is reminiscent of a theater, featuring a central stage or spot for the speaker, with audience chairs placed in straight or semi-circular rows facing the stage or projector. This arrangement is ideal for one-way knowledge sharing or audio-visual presentations.

The auditorium style conference room is most effective for accommodating large groups of people without the need for note-taking or interactive engagement.

Banquet Style

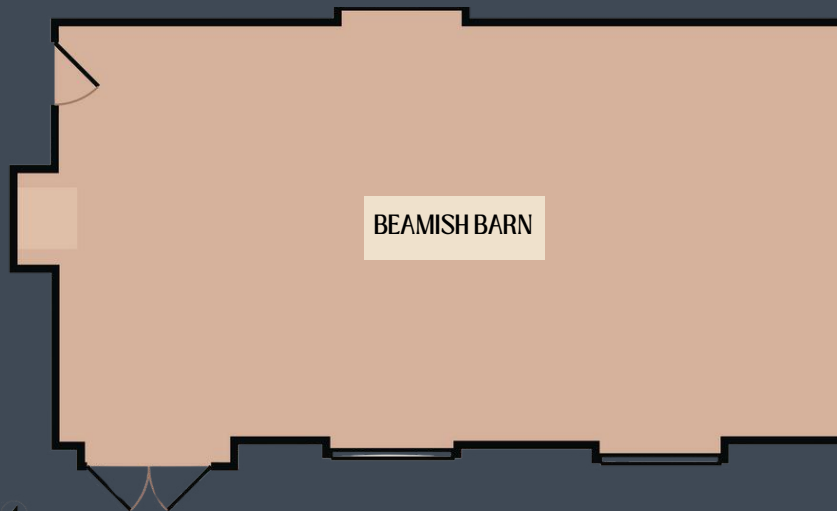

This conference room style is built around numerous round tables placed in a large, open room. This set is best for when your corporate event includes lunch or other refreshments during breaks in your programme. This style of meeting room is also great for networking sessions where people mingle in small groups around different tables and move freely between them.
