Refreshing the main interior walls with a coat of paint can make your home look fresh, new, and more attractive for photos, showings and open houses. The right neutral color on the walls can also give the home a cohesive look and the appearance of more square footage.

The color of your front door can drastically affect not only the feel of your home, but also its value. While painting a front door may seem like an easy update for a prospective home buyer to make, certain front door colors—like slate blue and black—can actually make your home sell for more.

According to recent research by Zillow, homes with a black front door could sell for an average of $6,449 more than similar homes with other front door colors.

Painting trim white is a quick way to update a home and increase its value. Our white trim recommendation is Sherwin William's Pure White. It is a white that pairs well with most wall colors. If you are looking for a cooler white, consider SW's Extra White (blue undertone) or for a creamier, warmer white, consider SW's Alabaster.
