The Attention Economy Is Ruthless and Most Businesses Still Advertise Like It's 2005

By Anesa K. Chastain Jones - Advertising Insights with Anesa
Oklahoma's Choice Weekly

There was a time when simply placing an ad was enough.

A business could run a newspaper ad, a radio spot, maybe a billboard, and people noticed. Consumers had fewer distractions, fewer screens, and far fewer companies competing for their attention every second of the day.

That world no longer exists.

Today's businesses operate in what many marketers call the "attention economy," a marketplace where attention itself has become one of the most valuable commodities on earth. Every scroll, click, video, notification, and advertisement is competing for a limited amount of consumer focus. The average person is exposed to thousands of marketing messages every single day, and most of them are mentally filtered out almost instantly.

That reality has fundamentally changed advertising.

Many businesses are still advertising the same way they did twenty years ago and wondering why the results are not what they used to be. The issue often is not that their products are bad or their services are poor. In many cases, the advertising itself simply fails to create impact.

Modern consumers do not just notice advertisements because they exist. They notice things that create emotion, curiosity, entertainment, relevance, or value. Advertising today must work harder than ever before to earn attention instead of expecting it automatically.

That is one of the biggest shifts businesses need to understand right now.

A clean logo and a phone number alone are no longer enough to make a lasting impression. Consumers are looking for connection, authenticity, and memorable experiences. They want businesses that feel real. They want brands with personality. They want messaging that stands out from the endless stream of repetitive and forgettable marketing they encounter every day.

The businesses succeeding in today's environment are often the ones willing to think differently. They are creating content people actually engage with instead of simply broadcasting advertisements into the void. They understand that visibility alone is not the goal anymore. Memorability is.

That distinction matters.

Many companies still believe the answer is simply getting their ad in front of more people. While reach certainly matters, exposure without engagement often produces very little return. Consumers may see an ad without truly absorbing it. The businesses generating real momentum are the ones creating advertising that people remember after they scroll away.

In many ways, modern advertising has become less about interruption and more about connection.

At the same time, businesses are also making a mistake by treating print and digital advertising like opposing forces. There is a tendency to frame the conversation as "print versus digital," when in reality the strongest strategies often combine both.

Print still carries credibility, local visibility, and permanence. A printed publication physically exists in homes, offices, waiting rooms, and businesses. It remains visible beyond a few seconds on a screen. Digital advertising, meanwhile, provides speed, targeting, video integration, analytics, and direct interaction.

When businesses learn how to bridge print and digital together effectively, advertising becomes significantly more powerful. A printed ad can direct readers to a website, a social media reel, an online special, a booking page, or interactive content through QR codes and digital integration. Digital platforms can then reinforce that message repeatedly after the initial exposure.

That repetition is critical because trust is rarely built from a single interaction.

The businesses that remain visible consistently are usually the ones consumers think of first when they are ready to make a purchasing decision. Consistency builds familiarity, and familiarity builds trust.

Branding also plays a far larger role today than many businesses realize.

Branding is not simply a logo or a color scheme. It is the overall feeling people associate with a company. It includes tone, presentation, customer experience, messaging, consistency, and reputation. Strong branding allows consumers to form emotional associations with a business before they ever make contact.

That emotional connection is becoming increasingly valuable in an era where consumers have endless choices available instantly online.

Another major shift currently reshaping advertising is artificial intelligence.

AI is already transforming marketing, content creation, automation, customer engagement, analytics, and design workflows at a rapid pace. Businesses that learn how to leverage these tools effectively are gaining significant advantages in speed and efficiency.

However, AI alone is not the solution.

Technology can generate content quickly, but it cannot replace strategic thinking, creativity, authenticity, or human understanding. The businesses that will succeed moving forward are not the ones relying entirely on automation. They are the ones combining technology with strong vision, clear branding, and genuine audience connection.

Ultimately, the advertising landscape has changed dramatically, whether businesses are prepared for it or not.

Consumers behave differently.

Technology moves faster.

Competition is louder.

Attention spans are shorter.

The companies that continue to adapt, evolve, and understand how to capture attention meaningfully will position themselves ahead of those still relying on outdated methods and safe, forgettable advertising.

Because in today's market, attention is no longer guaranteed.

It has to be earned.

*Welcome Home Stroud Alumni!!

have started buying little kits, things they can do in an afternoon. Let's them try a new hobby without a big investment and my oldest is obsessed with painting these little wood kits we get locally. The best part is, you can put down a throw away tablecloth and there is hardly any mess, and the kids have made you something cool.

Recently I had a conversation about spiders. My friend did her big spring porch clean, then had the grand babies over and they discovered a black widow had made a nest under one of the patio chairs. Everyone is safe, no bites. But, how scary?! With all the rain we have had it makes sense why spiders would be held up under the chair even after they have been sent packing once. So, I thought we should talk about the importance of deterrent spraying, now I understand with littles around a person might not want to use chemical sprays. I totally understand! If using a DIY mix you will need to do it more often, but some smell so good I don't think anyone will mind. The first one is a spray, 2 cups of water, 1/2 cup white vinegar, 15-20 drops of Peppermint oil or a Citrus oil in a spray bottle. Use weekly. Now, I have heard peppermint or Citrus oil on cotton balls placed around the house, but I don't know how well that would work outside. Depending on your furniture you could place it in the chairs.

I think I share this tip every year but it's too good to not share. I buy each person a cup with a lid/ straw and I make them use them all summer long. I also make them wash their own cup every day, no matter the kids age they can do it. You may need to help littles, but it helps teach them, so it is worth the effort. Another thing, there is no shame in using disposable dishes for the summer. Whether you work or are a stay at homer, summer dishes feel like they are never ending and you already feel like you don't have enough time, so if you can buy yourself some time in the way of not having dishes. Treat yourself!

Remember summer isn't always easy for people. It's hot and that makes people grumpy. Plus, kids are home and that can be added stress. A little kindness can go a long way, so spread it around.

Happy Cleaning

Hello May! May means school ending and Graduations, which means parties and that sinking feeling of what am I going to do with these kids all summer! Depending on your kids' age, summer activities can be easy to find. I am always on the hunt for activities for kids that don't break the bank. The library always has great activities for littles, and our local library has a few activities for teens. I
