The Case for Networking

By Rebecca Robertson

When new members join the Chamber of Commerce, they are often advised that they will get out of a membership what they put into it. As a representative of the Ambassador committee and as someone who holds a few professional roles which require networking, I challenge that participating in events offered by the Chamber is only the first step. Networking in general, and Chamber membership specifically, offers two other advantages.

First, a Chamber serves to connect businesses within a set area with one another, to maximize the synergy of differing talents and associations. Within a large company, you can find a sounding board, an extra set of hands, and the go-to person all within the walls of your office. Small businesses don't have those resources, so your network is key, especially when trying to start or grow a business. Meet your fellow members and call on them for business, sure, but also for some good old out-of-the box thinking, or referrals, or whatever else you may need.

Second, networking events are ideal training grounds. The newer business owner, and sometimes the experienced owner, may not feel comfortable promoting their business, they may not know how to actively listen, and they may need to learn to identify opportunity when it presents itself in a way that produces results. Networking isn't easy for everyone, but the Chamber is a safe environment where we all learn and grow, regardless of where we start.

The benefits that your networks offer, including the Chamber of Commerce, require you to take action. Invite someone for a cup of coffee, attend a ribbon cutting, connect with someone you don't know. Pick and choose what works with your skillset and schedule, but do something, and be open to the fact that sometimes the "something" is being open to the opportunity.

Retaining and Finding Talent

By Marilyn Sander, President, Proaction Careers

Some of the best advice a company can adhere to is define your mission and have employees working at your company understand and execute their part of the mission. Employees must understand the big picture and the company goals as well as their day-to-day roles to achieve these goals. Organizations that are aligned and working in tandem to deliver every day are those that achieve their KPI's and goals.

Retaining employees is about getting them the tools and resources they need to do their job as well as meeting with each one monthly to make sure they are fully engaged in their job and their importance to the organization. If there are changes coming, information, knowledge, and career development programs and training can be shared and completed. Employees want to be heard as well. Having some programs where suggestions can be submitted to management and voices can be heard around the table makes for an engaging work environment for employees.

In our current inflationary economy, competitive hourly wages, salaries, and benefit packages are very important. Make sure and review competitive information on salaries and wages at least once every six months. Having incentive programs such as flex time, remote work office hours, or educational reimbursement are ways to give employees benefits and in return retain talented employees. Expanding your list of employee developments, well-being, and educational options are a great way to engage and provide these valuable benefits.

Finding new employees is a challenge in a market place currently with so many job opportunities. Having a well-defined and well-written job description is a great place to start. This can be shared with others through groups on the internet, social media posts, and job boards. Word-of-mouth discussions are always great. When a job search takes time and research to find new and or specific skills or experience, one option is to hire a recruiting third-party agency to conduct an in-depth search and present qualified candidates. Communication is key whether email, internet messaging, print, word of mouth, or with your recruiter to find potential candidates.

When possible, getting to know your employees is a great way to make employees feel they are needed and respected. This feeling of being a part of a team and a valued employee who is doing their part every day is the best way ensure the future needs of your company and your clients are met.

Noteworthy Member Partnerships

Joining the Chamber of Commerce means you become part of a network of organizations focused on the task of growing business and improving the community where you work and live. We could write an entire edition on how our members partner with each other to improve our community and their businesses, but we'll share a couple to get you inspired:

Cy-Fair Helping Hands + Northwest Chrysler Jeep Dodge Ram

At a somewhat typical meeting at a networking event, Northwest Dodge's General Manager Lonnie Gipson and Cy-Fair Helping Hands Director Patricia Hudson got to talking. The two didn't know each other, but as you do, asked one another about their businesses. Lonnie learned about Cy-Fair Helping Hands and soon after, partnered with the non-profit organization focused on "operating hope to the homeless and hungry" by donating gift cards for their Thanksgiving Blessings Boxes as well as coming out to help distribute those gifts to those who needed help at the holidays.

Furthermore, this past March, when Cy-Fair Helping Hands needed to relocate their entire community food pantry, Patricia remembered Lonnie's previous words, "Just tell me when and how many you need," and when she asked, a great group of volunteers arrived and set to work immediately, loading and unloading their personal vehicles, a moving van, and several freight trucks! Pat and her team were so grateful for the help and says the aid of Lonnie and his team at Northwest Dodge was a true blessing!

Telge Roofing + VFW Post 8905

VFW Post 8905 has served the Cy-Fair community for over 75 years, with the primary mission of providing a place for veterans to call home, through programs and support from people who uniquely know what struggles those returning home from serving in the military can face. When faced with a more domestic struggle, that of an aging building and limited funds to make repairs, the VFW, whose primary role is to offer help, had to ask for help themselves. Post Commander Joshua Wilcox was tasked with the job of updating the VFW Post "from ceiling to floor," but the building had dozens of leaks and with each heavy rain, the truth of the situation became clear. The roof had to be fixed first so other renovations inside the building could be protected.

Enter Telge Roofing, a well-respected Cypress area roofing company who has been serving our area and beyond since 2008. Roy Campbell, Telge Roofing's owner and Cypress native, when contacted by Joshua with the challenge felt that he had to help. Partnering with his best suppliers and donating funds to complete the work, Telge Roofing started with the smaller of the two VFW buildings with plans to complete the second building in the near future. The work included taking down most of the rotting roof structure and rebuilding, so they had a solid base for the new roof which features 50-year shingles, and includes Telge Roofing's material warranty, leak warranty, and unlimited wind policy.

Joshua was appreciative of Telge Roofing's help but also impressed with their work ethic and speed. "The majority of the work was done in one day. The second day was spent installing some trim. I've never seen anyone work at a pace like they did." Now VFW Post 8905, who recently celebrated their 75th anniversary, can continue their interior renovations and move forward with even more plans to become a community destination, hosting Steak Nights, Bingo, Cook-Offs, and more engaging activities for the Cy-Fair community.
